Reyes assets reach P18M

Says net worth increase due to joint account with his mother

LOANS from a bank and from relatives and friends, according to Interior Secretary Angelo Reyes, financed the building of his P10-million house on Aquino Street, AFP Officer's Village in Fort Bonifacio. He also owns two other properties at the village with a market value of P5 million each as declared in his Statement of Assets, Liabilities and Net Worth.

A RETIRED general is in the spotlight for his fat bank account and several pieces of property, including two restaurants—one in Cebu City and another in Bulacan, which he declared only last year.

Official records furnished by a nongovernment organization showed that "cash and bank deposits" of Interior Secretary Angelo Reyes soared 5,381 percent to P4,111,000 in 2003 from only P75,000 in 2002.

In his Statement of Assets, Liabilities and Net Worth (SALN) for 2003, he declared total assets of P18,662,824.34. He also declared a loan from PSBank amounting to P9,471,353.91 and personal loans of P851,699 from relatives and friends, giving him a net worth of P8.3 million, up from P4.8 million the previous year.

The 73-percent increase in his net worth came while he was being investigated for building a house in Fort Bonifacio, estimated to be worth P10 million.

Reyes said he took out the PSBank loan to finance the building of his house.

Reyes previously served as defense secretary and Armed Forces chief of staff, under whom Brig. Gen. Carlos Garcia served as AFP comptroller. Garcia has been suspended and is under investigation for allegedly amassing ill-gotten wealth.

Interviewed by the Inquirer, Reyes explained that the increase of P3.5 million in his net worth came as result of his decision to convert his mother's account into a "joint bank account."

His mother, Purificacion, a former school teacher, is 94 years old.

"The money really belongs to my mother. We deemed it wise to open a joint account for us to be able to have access to her account should something happen to her," Reyes said of his wheelchair-bound mother.

He showed the Inquirer a photocopy of the joint account that he opened with his mother at Equitable PCI Bank. It has P4,194,000 in deposits. He said his mother had opened her account a long time ago.

Reyes said it was not fair for him to be pillo-

Pimentel: Garcia could not have acted alone

CUT and cut clean.

Senate Minority Leader Aquilino Pimentel Jr. is calling on Maj. Gen. Carlos Garcia to spill the beans now before it's too late.

Pimentel, who was reached by phone in Cagayan De Oro City, said the suspended two-star general "can't and shouldn't bear the cross of graft in the Armed Forces of the Philippines by his lonesome as if he were the Christ."

Pimentel said it was common belief that as AFP comptroller, he couldn't have amassed huge sums of questionable wealth by himself.

"Subordinates' consent and superiors' OK are needed to effect amounts transfer under the command structure of the AFP," he said.

Garcia reportedly maintained $1.42 million worth of cash deposits on top of several pieces of real estate property in the United States. Just recently, he and his sons were able to withdraw from the AFP Loans and Saving Association Inc. (AFPSLAI) a total of P19 million.

Garcia, who is confined at the University of the Sto. Tomas Hospital for "obstructive sleep apnea," (See story on Page A17.) is now being investigated by the Office of the Ombudsman and Congress and will face court-martial proceedings.

Pimentel said that Garcia should come clean. "If he spills the beans as he should, he could come out of the mess smelling good because the need of the hour is AFP housecleaning," said the leader of the minority bloc in the Senate.

Although the general is the focal point of a corruption scandal, Garcia can still save his tarnished reputation, according to the senator.

"Even the Oakwood mutineers and disgruntled soldiers would applaud him for it," Pimentel said.

Otherwise, Pimentel said, Garcia's

CEBU LAWYER'S MURDER

Probe focused on Ecleo cult member

By Jolene R. Bulambot
PDI Visayas Bureau

CEBU CITY—Authorities are looking into the possible involvement of a member of the cult headed by Ruben Ecleo Jr. in the murder of the lawyer that had filed a parricide case against him.

The features of Michael Pavila, of Cagayan Silo, Palawan, match the sketch of the supposed killer of lawyer Arbet Sta. Ana-Yongco, according to Reynaldo Esmeralda, National Bureau of Investigation director for Central Visayas.

Esmeralda yesterday said initial investigation showed that Pavila, 44, was a former soldier and a reported member of Ecleo's Philippine Benevolent Missionaries Association (PBMA). He said Pavila's whereabouts were being checked.

Ecleo is the PBMA's "supreme master."

But Ecleo's lawyer, Orlando Salatandre, said investigators should not make allegations without sufficient evidence. He also said investigators should also look into the other sensational cases that Yongco was handling, and not focus on Ecleo's case alone.

"I am appealing to the investigators to be silent. The premature pronouncements are damaging to my client, to the PBMA and to his family," Salatandre said.

He reiterated his claim that Ecleo had nothing to do with the Monday killing.

Ecleo is accused of killing his wife Alona Bacolod-Ecleo in 2002.

He posted bail of P1 million after the court allowed him to seek

Pacificador acquittal shocks Javier family

By Nestor P. Burgos Jr.
PDI Visayas Bureau

SAN JOSE, Antique—The son of Evelio Javier yesterday condemned the acquittal of the man accused of masterminding his murder in February 1986.

"The very institution that my dad believed in and defended with his life is the very one that is now spitting on him," said Francis Gideon Javier, elder son of the ex-governor of Antique who was gunned down at 43.

Gideon said his mother Precious was shocked when he called her in the United States to inform her of Arturo Pacificador's acquittal on Tuesday.

"She had started believing in the justice system after being denied justice for all these years. But whatever faith she had was thrown out of the window," he said.

But Judge Rudy Castrojas, presiding judge of the Antique Regional Trial Court Branch 12, advised those critical of his decision to "read [it] first."

Castrojas said the perception that Pacificador was the mastermind of Javier's murder "remains a perception."

"Judges cannot decide on the basis of presumptions but on clear evidence of guilt," he said.

Justice Secretary Raul Gonzalez also said the decision should be respected because the law had Lawmakers want 50 big tax cheats named

By Michael Lim Ubac
and Christine Avendaño

ADMINISTRATION senators yesterday called on the Federation of Filipino-Chinese Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FFCCCI) to identify the 50 billionaires and 42,500 millionaires who it said were not paying the correct taxes but would be willing to come out if the tax amnesty law is passed.

Senate Majority Leader Francis Pangilinan pleaded with the 50 ethnic Chinese billionaires in particular to pay the correct amount of taxes, even without a tax amnesty, to help save the country from economic collapse.

Sen. Manuel Villar, chair of the Senate finance committee, said Guillermo de Joya, the FFCCCI official who dangled the bait of Chinese-Filipino businessmen willing to start paying the right amount of taxes if the tax amnesty pushes through, should reveal the names of the tax violators.

"It just becomes a guessing game and even those who are paying diligently become a subject of speculation. I think they should name names so that our tax collectors can go after them," he said.

De Joya, a member of the FFCCCI's tax and business advocacy committee, made the disclosure of the 50 tax-delinquent billionaires at a Senate hearing last Tuesday as a way of convincing the finance committee and the Senate to approve a tax amnesty bill that would lower the tax rate from 3 percent to 1 percent.

The tax amnesty bill is one of the eight measures being pushed by Malacañang to raise P80 billion a year to cope with the ballooning budget deficit.

But De Joya said he could not disclose the businessmen's identities to protect them from harassment.

Besides the billionaires, De Joya also revealed that more FFCCCI members—both Filipinos and dummies of foreigners—would likely avail of the tax amnesty and start paying the correct taxes, if only to protect themselves from further "harassment" by revenue officials.

But Sen. Sergio Osmeña III viewed De Joya's claim that the Chinese-Filipino businessmen benefiting from the tax amnesty could contribute a lot to the nation's coffers was "exaggerated."

"That's pie in the sky. They're throwing out numbers without validation," the senator said. Contrary to the FFCCCI claim that it could help bring out people with a combined net worth of P1.5 trillion, Osmeña said the group could only raise P15 billion.

Osmeña also warned that the businessmen might inflate their assets because the tax amnesty rate they would pay, at 1 percent, was low.

"There is a trick they can use, like if their assets are P10 million, they would blow it to P30 million and then pay the tax amnesty rate. But in the following years, they will have an income of P3 million, they will include this to the extra P20 million and say they earned this before," he said.

"They can cover up several years of income in the future. That's the big loophole in a tax amnesty," said Osmeña who said a tax amnesty was "immoral."

In the House, administration representatives yesterday urged the Bureau of Internal Revenue and the Bureau of Customs to act on the information provided by the FFCCCI on the tax-delinquent billionaires.

In a statement, Lakas-CMD Rep. Exequiel Javier (Antique), vice chair of the ways and means committee, said the BIR and BoC "should not pass up this opportunity to go after the tax cheats."

Rep. Antonio Cuenco (Lakas, Cebu City), chair of the committee on foreign affairs, said the BIR and BoC should mobilize their intelligence units to identify the big-time tax cheats and seek the cooperation of De Joya, and provide a system of rewards and incentives, if necessary.

After vindication, textbook errors whistle-blower insists on apology

Donna Z. Pazilbugan

THE WHISTLE-BLOWER who exposed factual errors in history textbooks is now demanding an apology from the Department of Education after a ranking DepEd official admitted that the textbook used by public high schools for the last seven years indeed contained grave errors.

Vindicated by the DepEd's own findings, Marian School supervisor Antonio Calipjo Go said the DepEd owed him an apology for initially dismissing his claim and accusing him of malicious intent.

Go had exposed the glaring factual errors in the history textbook "Asya: Noon, Ngayon at sa Hinaharap" and recently in three other public school textbooks.

"All they have to do is clear my name and I'll be willing to work with them. An apology won't cost them a single cent," Go told the INQUIRER yesterday.

In a letter to Go the other day, DepEd Undersecretary for Programs Fe Hidalgo confirmed that the Asya textbook is indeed riddled with errors.

"A review of the book 'Asya' has just been done by external evaluators... Our panel of experts have found errors and we are interested in ensuring that we are able to identify all of them," said Hidalgo.

But Go said that while Hidalgo's letter admitted the errors, it did not show any sign of apology.

Food aid only for those who send kids to school

By Juliet Labog-Javellana
and Volk Contreras

EVEN as the social welfare department is putting the final touches on the government's food subsidy program, President Macapagal-Arroyo yesterday decided to tie the program to education.

Families that qualify among the hungry will receive food assistance but only if they send their children to school.

This latest variation of the government's apparently still-evolving program of food intervention came from Sen. Ralph Recto and the President liked it so much, she decided to adopt it.

Arguing that the government should be encouraging the education of the poor while feeding them, Recto proposed a "school attendance for rice" swap program.

He proposed that 100,000 elementary school-age children be chosen from "ultra-poor and food-insecure families" to be given one kilogram of rice for every day that they attend school.

The President has directed that the food assistance program be couched through the schools.

"If they want to have food assistance, they have to send their children to school," Ms Arroyo told Malacañang reporters at lunch yesterday.

She directed Social Welfare Secretary Corazon "Dinky" Soliman and Education Secretary Florencio "Burch" Abad to identify the beneficiaries and determine whether the food assistance would come in the form of food coupons or actual food items.

The two secretaries have been ordered to sit down with Recto to discuss the proposal. Political adviser Gabriel Claudio was arranging for Recto to meet with them, Ms Arroyo said.

A system of food coupons for distribution to the poorest families was announced by Malacañang following the release of a Social Weather Stations survey showing that 15.1 percent of households had nothing to eat.

Soliman yesterday said the DSWD was putting the final touches to the food coupons system, which is set for implementation starting November.

She also clarified that a livelihood assistance component—a key service that the social welfare department provides—would accompany the coupon distribution. She said the mechanics of the program will be finalized on Oct. 16.

Earlier, Soliman said the beneficiaries would be the five million holders of Philhealth cards.

Also at an earlier press briefing, DSWD Undersecretary Celia Yungco said the plan was to give out a minimum of P1,200 monthly subsidy to five million families, leading some to conclude that the monthly tab would run up to P6 billion.

Yesterday, the President said that these earlier announcements were just the result of some officials "thinking aloud," and that some of these proposals have been thrown out.

"The DSWD will work it out and it cannot be a total subsidy; it must only be a partial subsidy," she said.

GMA won't be swayed by 'red flags' vs Garcia

PRESIDENT Macapagal-Arroyo yesterday said she would not be swayed by protest actions seeking the ouster of Government Service and Insurance System president and general manager Winston Garcia.

But while President Arroyo is ignoring the "red flags" raised against Garcia, she has ordered the Presidential Anti-Graft Commission to conduct an independent probe on corruption charges leveled against the GSIS chief as well as the reinsurance syndicated allegedly behind Garcia's well-funded ouster campaign.

In a lunch meeting with reporters yesterday, President Arroyo said: "Whether I'm personally satisfied with his performance or not is beside the point. But let me say that when the red flag start coming out and demanding the ouster of anybody, that's the least effective thing."

The President compared Garcia's situation with similar protests made by government employees against her Cabinet men—former Tourism Secretary Richard Gordon and former Education Secretary Raul Roco.

"Imagine, if I had followed those red flags on Dick Gordon our tourism would not have grown in double digit. They also did it against Roco. Even after he (Roco) left me to run for President, I consider him a good servant," the President said.

The President regretted having "sacrificed" former Social Security System Administrator Virgilio Nolasco after employees of the pension fund trooped out of their offices protesting his reforms and demanding for his ouster. Nolasco was transferred to the Development Bank of the Philippines. Gil Cubacungan Jr.

COOPERATION!

Solidarity, trust, and mutual help are the most valuable resources that we have to meet the challenges of a rapidly changing global economy.

IN MANY Philippine communities, ordinary people work together to reduce the costs of producers' supplies, consumer goods, and credit through pooling of resources and collective transactions. Hundreds of savings-and-credit cooperatives provide better financial services to households and enterprises at rates way below than those of commercial banks. Agricultural co-ops allow farmers to compete in the market. Community-based co-ops operate day care, water services, transport services, sanitation, and housing. They build community infrastructures, protect vulnerable ecosystems and pursue resource management and regeneration of coastal areas and uplands.

Through the 7th National Cooperative Summit, we aim to unite co-ops in common policy, technical, and business agenda to advance the cooperative movement in a various lines of economic and non-economic activities, highlight the existing initiatives, project achievements and policy positions of cooperatives and of their respective networks or apexes, and establish common grounds with national and local authorities, private business sectors, civil society groups, and other entities to advance the cooperative option among more and more sections of our society.

GMA disowns lawyer's bid to abolish Congress

By Juliet Labog-Javellana

PRESIDENT Macapagal-Arroyo yesterday put an end to the proposal aired by her election lawyer for the abolition of Congress to raise revenues for the government.

"I do not associate myself with his statements (made by him) as a private citizen," Ms Arroyo told Palace reporters during a luncheon.

Ms Arroyo said that while she retained Romulo Macalintal as her election lawyer, she had nothing to do with his proposal "Congress-less" government from 2007 to 2010.

"It's not like Toting Bunye, the moment he talks he talks for me," she said of her spokesperson and press secretary.

But Ms Arroyo said she was not going to fire Macalintal as her private lawyer in the electoral protest pending at the Supreme Court.

"He's one of the best election lawyers in town," she said.

Senate President Franklin Drilon, incensed by Macalintal's proposal, said the lawyer should first quit as the President's counsel if he wanted to pursue his idea.

"I was with Senate President Drilon last night and he did not tell me anything so maybe he was misquoted or maybe that's an off the cuff (remark) because sometimes people make statements not intended to be," she said.

Macalintal had said in the first instance that he did not consult the President and that it did not reflect her sentiments because he had nothing to do with governance. But his being the President's election lawyer became an issue to the legislators.

Macalintal had proposed that a constitutional amendment be undertaken before 2007 to change the form of government into a "semi-parliamentary" system with a unicameral legislature by 2010.

He said the new constitution should contain a transitory provision that the elections for the 12 senators and the 250 members of the House in 2007 be canceled so that the country would practically be Congress-less for a three-year period. He said this could save the government P67.7 billion, the budget spent for the two chambers for three years.

He said the legislative power during the three-year period would still be exercised by the 12 newly-elected senators whose term of office lasts up to 2010.

But while the President scoffed at Macalintal's proposal, she is pursuing constitutional reforms including changing Congress from a bicameral to a unicameral legislature.

This was embodied in the President's Medium-Term Philippine Development Plan that Malacañang unveiled in time to mark the President's 100th day in office on Oct. 9.

Part 5 of the MTPDP calls for the shift to a federal form of government, a unicameral parliamentary system, reforms in the electoral and political party system, prohibition of political dynasties and changes in the "restrictive provisions" on national economy and patrimony.

The plan said constitutional reforms were necessary to address the problems of obstruction and delay in legislation and policy-making, the highly centralized system of government, personalistic politics, lack of accountable and functional political parties and lack of domestic capital resources.

Cardinal Sin getting better, docs say

THREE days in the hospital with the country's best doctors have helped retired Manila Archbishop Jaime Cardinal Sin.

Sin, who suffered hypotension and subsequent congestive heart failure Monday, is in a much better condition now, his secretary Fr. Rufino Sescon, said in a statement released yesterday.

"The Cardinal's doctors said that his condition is steadily improving and that all vital signs are stable. He has shown more direct eye contact," Sescon said.

Sin, 76, may remain at the Cardinal Santos Memorial Medical Center for a longer period. Doctors still could not say how long the prelate has to be observed.

Sescon said that Sin himself was getting rather irritated with the respirator that remains attached to him so he could breathe easily.

"The Cardinal is in high spirits, even smiling despite the respirator, which is irritating him a lot," Sescon said.

Visitors are still not allowed but Mother Butler's Guild and the groups of religious sisters came to the hospital in San Juan to pray for the Cardinal, who served as archbishop of Manila for 29 years until his retirement last year.

Gospel:

Eph 1:3-10

Lk 11:47-54

Jesus said to the Pharisees, "A curse is on you, for you build yourselves to the prophets your ancestors killed. So you approve and agree with what your ancestors did. Is it not so? They got rid of the prophets, and now you can build!"

(The Wisdom of God also said,) "I will send prophets and apostles and this people will kill and persecute some of them. But the present generation will have to answer for the blood of all the prophets that has been shed since the foundation of the world, from the blood of Abel to the blood of Zechariah, who was murdered between the altar and the sanctuary. Yes, I tell you, the people of this time will have to answer for them all."

"A curse is on you, teachers of the Law, for you have taken the key of knowledge. You yourselves have not entered, and you prevented others from entering."

As Jesus left that place, the teachers of the Law and the Pharisees began to harass him, asking him endless questions, setting traps to catch him in something he might say.

Commentary

"You have taken away the key of knowledge! This is the abiding challenge to every teacher: even when they are sincere and dedicated they could well be sowing discouragement and defeat in the minds of their students."

Simplify the case: someone is showing you how to operate some new computer program. (This is a fairly new kind of teaching, and it shows the essence very clearly.) They will probably sit in your chair and leave you standing beside them. (If you were teaching someone to drive a car, where would you sit?) They are likely to delight in showing how fast they can do things. And they are likely to speak in tongues. (Mobile phones are even worse: there you don't even get a look in!) No one displays so much swagger, I find, as the person who can do something with a computer that you can't do. But I've seen a few who adjust to your capacity, who have no urge to show off, who really want you to be able to do it yourself. These are the real teachers, and it's probably a pity that they are not teaching theology or philosophy or literature.

Teachers! I used to be one. I remember my frightening definition of teaching: intellectual inoculation. I used to feel that I was injecting students with a weakened strain of my subject, and they were developing the proper antibodies, which would give them a life-long immunity to the subject! Teaching must be one of the hardest things in the world to do. As hard as loving—because it's akin to it.

Sorry, it's not you, Palace tells would-be nat'l treasurer

By Gil C. Cabacungan

PRESIDENT Macapagal-Arroyo yesterday apologized to Rolando Macasaet, the former president and chief executive officer of the Philippine Newspaper Construction Corp., for erroneous newspaper reports announcing his appointment as the National Treasurer.

"I'm sorry, I apologize to Rolly. That should have not come out," said the President.

Various newspapers (not the INQUIRER) reported yesterday that Executive Secretary Eduardo Ermita had signed the appointment papers of Macasaet, who was an appointee of ousted President Estrada at the PNCC, as the new National Treasurer.

The President explained that she had sent off the papers of Macasaet and her other nominees to Finance Secretary Juanita Amatong who had been directed to fill up the National Treasurer seat, left vacant by the resignation of Mina Figueroa amid a controversy over the government's borrowing strategy.

She said that until Amatong releases the documents and announces her choice, "it is not considered an appointment."

The President said Amatong had crossed out Macasaet's name in the short list of nominees because "there were other candidates who have more experience... and they are good ones."

She said Amatong is expected to announce her choice soon.

Respected

In a brief press statement, Macasaet said he respected the decision of the President.

"I am willing to serve her administration in any capacity, as she feels fit, for the good of this country," he said.

Macasaet, who was president of the PNCC until April, is a business partner of Estrada's son, San Juan Mayor JV Ejercito, in a lending firm called Foremost Credit Resources.

He is a son-in-law of Tarlac Gov. Jose "Apeng" Yap, a close ally of the President.

Macasaet headed the lending operations of Westmont Banking Corp. before it was taken over by the Singapore-based United Overseas Bank. He is believed to have close links with Edgardo Espiritu, the country's ambassador to Britain and former owner of Westmont. He is also said to have some connection with defeated presidential candidate Fernando Poe Jr. and the latter's economic adviser, Jose Pardo.

Figueroa suddenly resigned last month reportedly in disgust over the government's borrowing strategy, in particular the flotation of $1 billion worth of National Power Corp. bonds that allegedly lost the country an estimated $20 million (P1.126 billion). Figueroa's resignation will take effect on Oct. 15.

The loss estimate was based on the movement of the 15- and 25-year Philippine bonds which gained by as much as two percentage points a day after the Napotcor bonds were sold on Sept. 17 at a discount of one percentage point.

SUPREME COURT DOCTRINES

REMEDIAL LAW (CIVIL PROCEDURE)—Review by the Supreme Court of matters raised for the first time on appeal—Petitioners argue that in past instances we have reviewed matters raised for the first time during appeal. True, but we have done so only by way of exception involving clearly meritorious situations. Some instances where we reviewed matters raised for the first time on appeal involved the presence of at least one of the following circumstances: 1. that the issues are closely related to one properly assigned (PCIB vs CA et al., L-34931, 18 March 1988, 159 SCRA 24); 2. that the determination of an issue properly assigned is dependent upon the one being raised for the first time (Ortigas, Jr. vs Lufthansa German Airlines, L-28773, 30 June 1975, 64 SCRA 610); 3. if in avoiding the issue, the court would be sacrificing substance for technicality (Dilag vs Heirs of Resurreccion, 76 Phil. 649 [1946]). This case does not fall under any of those exceptions. The fact that the case proceeded to trial, with the petitioners actively participating without raising the necessary objection, all the more requires that they be bound by the stipulations they made at the pre-trial. Petitioners were well aware that they raised the defense of prescription and laches since they included it in their answer. However, for reasons of their own, they did not include this defense in the pre-trial. [Citations omitted.] [Justice Carpio, First Division, Villanueva vs Court of Appeals, G. R. No. 143286]

Take Jalosjos back to jail if he's well, DOJ orders

By Philip C. Tubeza

JUSTICE Secretary Raul Gonzalez yesterday directed the Bureau of Corrections to determine if former Zamboanga Rep. Romeo Jalosjos could now be brought back to the New Bilibid Prisons in Muntinlupa.

Gonzalez said he ordered Bucor chief Vicente Vinarao to have government doctors check the medical condition of Jalosjos, who was confined at the Makati Medical Center after he suffered a heart attack on Oct. 2.

The former lawmaker has refused to return to the national penitentiary, claiming that there were threats on his life.

"I'm becoming suspicious that Mr.

Jalosjos might just be malingering because he is now claiming that he has death threats," Gonzalez said.

"I want to know if his condition will now permit his return to the NBP," he added.

Jalosjos is serving two life terms at the NBP in Muntinlupa for raping an 11-year-old girl in 1996. He informed Bureau of Corrections Director General Vicente Vinarao that he would not return to the NBP due to alleged death threats.

Gonzalez said that death threats are not valid reasons for Jalosjos' continued stay at the Makati Medical Center.

"His fear for his life is not a ground for his continued stay at the hospital. As long as he is sick, we will allow his hospitalization, but we cannot allow him to use his hospital room as his prison cell," Gonzalez said.

After learning of the house's bloody past in a newspaper, the Lins refused to move into the house in northern Sydney, fearing it could be haunted.

The Buddhist couple demanded that the real estate agency return their $580,000 deposit, saying the company failed to tell them about the slayings.

The reactors, L. J. Hooker, said Wednesday the Lins would get their full deposit back. The reactors had previously refused to scrap the contract, saying they had no obligation to disclose the property's history.

"The vendors will not enforce the contract they have with the purchasers," Michael Davoren, a spokesperson for the agency said in a statement.

3 life sentences

Sef Gonzales was meted out three life sentences last month after he was found guilty of stabbing and beating to death his mother, father and sister in July 2001 to get his hands on the family fortune.

Davoren said the agency would put the property back on the market, and this time would outline its history to prospective buyers.

"All marketing material in this campaign will include information on the history of the house," he said. "It will be carefully worded so as to be fully informative yet sensitive to the Gonzales family."

Horrible idea

A British entrepreneur told a television show last Thursday that he wanted to buy the Sydney house and turn it into a tourist attraction.

But the municipal council rejected the plan, saying zoning laws prohibited the house from being used in such a way. AP government officials and public schools to link arms and work collaboratively for the improvement of education in their province.

Known as "school adoption core teams," these informal groups are usually made up of respected members of the community, like the Jaycees and Rotarians, members of non-government organizations, and church and school officials. Working as one, they are redefining People Power by bringing it into the heart of the community.

Having dedicated community-based facilitators like Ayen to get things moving is a big help, too. Her success in Negros Occidental clearly underscores the value of People Power at the community level as a valid instrument for positive change.

Adopt a School

In the 15 months that Ayen has been promoting the Education Revolution, she has formed 62 adoption groups in Negros Occidental.

"Adopt a School" is one of two programs that tell us that the Education Revolution is really happening, that the advocacy works so long as we have people and communities who aspire for quality education for their children.

To be sure, Ayen and the people she has reached still have a lot of communities to link up with. Negros Occidental alone has 575 public elementary schools spread out in 39 districts of the Department of Education. There are about 18 million students enrolled in over 46,000 public schools nationwide.

Mentoring the Mentors

Still, it lifts the hearts of the FWWPP board of trustees to know that the spirit of People Power lives as we marked our second year of the Education Revolution on Oct. 12.

The other program that keeps our hearts beating fast is "Mentoring the Mentors," a five-day live-in seminar that awakens teachers to their self-worth and their true spiritual role in the lives of their students.

The training modules used during the program sessions were developed and conducted by four experts—Chinit Delgado Rufino, Lirio Ongpin-Mapa, Evelyn Mejillano and Celia Adriano.

The response of the 646 principals and master teachers who have seen and heard them is enthusiastic beyond words.

This has inspired the FWWPP to commission award-winning documentarist Butch Nolasco to produce a video of the nine training modules actually being conducted by these four amazing women. A training manual to go along with the Mentoring the Mentors video has also been published.

Armed with the video and the manual, trained facilitators can now consistently replicate the sessions in every region without having to transport the four speakers from venue to venue.

To meet the need for facilitators who share the Education Revolution advocacy, the FWWPP recently signed a memorandum of agreement with the Philippine Association for Teacher Education (PaTe).

The members of PaTe, a national organization of teacher education institutions (or colleges and universities that have education degree programs), are committed to the vision of education for social transformation. Part of their avowed mission is to raise the quality of Philippine education through well trained and highly motivated teachers.

After having closely observed the Mentoring the Mentors sessions, Dr. Amor de Torres, PaTe national president, was as enthusiastic about it as the participants. In fact, she occasionally conducts some of the sessions herself.

Moving forward

To fill the vacancy left by the late Doreen Fernandez, our founding vice president and People Power stalwart, the FWWPP last year invited an education executive, Dr. Maria "Butchie" Lim-Ayuyao of the Centro Escolar University, to join its board.

Butchie, the FWWPP's vibrant new president, has traveled across the country, from Laguna to the Autonomous Region in Muslim Mindanao, to bring the message of the Education Revolution and introduce the Adopt a School and Mentoring the Mentors programs to members of the academe and to community leaders.

She has also found very creative ways to help ease the public schools' endemic lack of facilities. Recently she facilitated sizeable donations of used but serviceable school furniture and equipment by two universities to public schools in Pampanga and Laguna.

She says this is beneficial for both parties. Colleges and universities periodically dispose of furniture and equipment to make way for new ones, so why not donate these to public schools?

Butchie has in turn invited Panfilo O. Domingo, president of the University of the East and executive director of the Tan Yan Kee Foundation, to be an FWWPP trustee.

Domingo is also well respected in the international financial world, having led Philippine National Bank in one of its most spectacular turnarounds in its corporate history.

He has sought to push the Education Revolution even further by convincing big banks with branches nationwide to integrate this advocacy into their respective corporate social responsibility programs. He believes that the Education Revolution is a great way to emphasize a bank's pivotal role in the growth and development of the community.

Significant gains

The Education Revolution has made significant gains from the time it was launched.

As of August, it has facilitated the adoption of 60 public elementary schools and 16 high schools by private organizations in Laguna, Negros Occidental and Pangasinan.

Ayen Tolentino recently visited the cities of Cebu and Dumaguete upon the invitation of private groups and individuals who want to join the Education Revolution after having read about it in the INQUIRER.

The Mentoring the Mentors Program has been equally active, with sessions conducted for groups as far as Marawi City.

A major training session was recently concluded in Region 6; regional sessions have also been completed for Regions 4, 10, Caraga and 12.

Program director Chinit Rufino is working doubly hard to make Mentoring the Mentors an integral part of the training curriculum of in-service public school teachers.

In the days ahead, the FWWPP will need more community-based Adopt a School facilitators like Ayen, and even more Mentoring the Mentors facilitators conducting sessions in every DepEd district.

This is what must be done if we hope to see some genuine improvement in the academic performance of Filipino students.

It is just as important that the community's resource holders, whether they are individuals or private businesses, realize that education is too complex an issue to be left to the government alone.

Making a difference

We all need to help, and the Education Revolution is a great place to start.

You can adopt a school and sponsor a community facilitator like Ayen for your own community. Or you can sponsor a Mentoring the Mentors session for all the schools in your DepEd district.

It is not as sizeable as it seems, because the resources needed are only for one community and a few schools. But the small effort will make a difference if every community starts looking for ways to help for its own schools.

Already, many other groups have embarked on their own education-oriented initiatives. Just recently, the DepEd recognized 97 private organizations, including the FWWPP, for their concern and generous assistance to public education.

Many more are seriously considering shifting their focus to helping Philippine education regain some measure of global recognition.

Still, the generally poor quality of Philippine education, particularly in the public school system, remains one of the country's major social issues. The only bigger problem is poverty.

Long-term solution to poverty

The wonderful thing is that through the Education Revolution, People Power has again been awakened, this time with the realization that quality education is the only viable, long-term solution to fight poverty.

For details on the Education Revolution, log on to <http://www.fwwpp.org> or contact executive director Butch Hernandez by e-mail (fwwpp@globelines.com.ph) or phone (631-49700).

Further information may also be obtained through FWWPP officers and trustees Maria Lim-Ayuyao, president; Felicitas A. Arroyo, corporate secretary and treasurer; and trustees Jose V. Abueva, Edilberto de Jesus, Panfilo Domingo, Delfin Lazaro and Amado Daronilla.

Iraq war made terrorism worse—Blix

Britain admits error

LONDON—The British government Tuesday formally withdrew one of the key arguments it had used for invading Iraq, as it faced demands in parliament for a "full apology" on how it presented the case for war.

However, Foreign Secretary Jack Straw stoutly defended his government's decision to join the US-led conflict as he was grilled by MPs following a new US report showing Saddam Hussein possessed no banned weapons at the time.

"Although we can now see that some of the intelligence was wrong, I continue to believe the judgements we made and the actions we took were right," Straw told the House of Commons.

Given Saddam's suspicious behavior toward United Nations arms inspectors and the intelligence then available, Straw said it would have required "a huge leap of faith" to give the Iraqi dictator the benefit of the doubt.

However, Straw's predecessor Robin Cook asked whether it "would have been wiser" to give the inspectors time to do their work given the doubts about weapons and the new findings of the Iraq Survey Group (ISG).

The ISG released a 1,000-page report last week that found Saddam had destroyed most of his chemical and biological weapons after losing the 1991 Gulf War and that his nuclear program had "progressively decayed." AFP

LONDON—The war in Iraq has put neither Iran nor North Korea off the idea of nuclear weapons and has "stimulated terrorism," Hans Blix, the former United Nations chief arms inspector in Iraq, said Tuesday.

"You wouldn't expect any government to admit that they were wrong," Blix told BBC radio. "I think, like everybody else, that it is good that Saddam (Hussein) is gone. The world is better off without Saddam."

"But the world is not any safer. If this was meant to be a signal to terrorists to stop their activities, it has failed miserably, it has stimulated terrorism."

"And it doesn't stop proliferation. The Iranians and North Koreans, if they are up to that, they are not stopped by it."

"So I don't think that any of the aims, except getting rid of Saddam himself, have succeeded."

Blix poured scorn on British Foreign Secretary Jack Straw for justifying the invasion of Iraq, originally based on the premise that Saddam had weapons of mass destruction, on a now watered-down reason that Saddam had the intention of producing such weaponry.

The chief US weapons hunter, Charles Duelfer, found in his 1,000-page Iraq Survey Group report published last week that Saddam had destroyed most of his chemical and biological weapons after his 1991 Gulf War defeat and that his nuclear program had "progressively decayed."

But he said the Iraqi leader had hoped to renew his weapons quest if sanctions were lifted.

"When you read Duelfer's report now you really wonder how dangerous he was," Blix, a former Swedish foreign minister who led the UN hunt for banned chemical and biological weapons in Iraq before the March 2003 invasion, told the BBC.

"OK, he claimed that there were programs to produce weapons of mass destruction. But he also takes a step back from this and says there were no documented programs."

"What he has got out of interrogation of various people who worked with Saddam was rather that 'well he wanted to, that was probably his intention' etc., but these are straws I think for Jack Straw to cling to."

Blix has previously criticized British Prime Minister Tony Blair's government for "hyping" pre-war intelligence about Iraq and denounced US President George W. Bush's war as boosting terrorism and causing more suffering than Saddam's dictatorial regime had.

Blair admitted in a Labor party speech earlier this month that pre-war claims about Saddam's threat were wrong, but he and his closest ally Bush have staunchly defended taking Iraq to war. AFP

Iran slams door on bid to stop nuke program

TEHRAN—The EU cannot force Iran to give up its right to enrich uranium, Iran's foreign minister said, apparently slamming the door on European Union efforts to halt the process and ease fears Tehran is seeking a nuclear bomb.

"It is wrong for them (the EU) to think they can, through negotiations, force Iran to stop enrichment," Foreign Minister Kamal Kharrazi told a conference in Tehran on Tuesday. "Iran will never give up its right to enrichment."

Diplomats said the EU had agreed on Monday to prepare a package of "carrots and sticks" to get Iran to comply with demands by the UN's International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) to suspend enrichment activities—a process which can be used to make material for atomic bombs.

The New York Times reported on Tuesday that US officials were also working on the package of incentives with the EU.

Washington believes Iran is secretly developing nuclear arms and wants it referred to the UN Security Council for possible sanctions.

Iran says it wants to master the full nuclear fuel cycle, including enrichment, so it does not have to rely on imported fuel for an ambitious atomic energy program.

EU ministers had urged Russia, which is building an atomic plant in Iran despite strong US criticism, to join the initiative. But a foreign ministry official in Moscow said on Tuesday Russia thought the EU proposals would be ineffective.

Russia has long maintained that Iran has an entirely peaceful nuclear program and cannot use Moscow's atomic know-how to make weapons.

Although Iran is not enriching uranium at present, it is preparing a large batch of raw uranium ready for the process and has resumed building enrichment centrifuges in defiance of a previous agreement with Britain, Germany and France.

The IAEA called on Iran last month to halt such activities and said it may be sent to the Security Council if it failed to do so by the next IAEA board meeting on Nov. 25. Reuters

Bush, Kerry in statistical dead heat ahead of debate

Each man hopes to use their last chance to captivate a national audience of tens of millions of viewers, to break the deadlock in the election race, which most opinion polls suggest is too close to call three weeks from polling day.

A CBS News poll released Tuesday gave Bush 48 percent of voter intentions and his Massachusetts senator rival 45 percent, a statistical dead heat because of the margin of error.

A daily tracking survey by The Washington Post gave Bush 50 percent of the ballot, compared to Kerry's 47 percent.

A host of other polls in recent days have given similarly tight results, some with Kerry just ahead.

Democrats expect Bush to try to wrest the focus of the debate from the solely domestic issues it is supposed to address, seen as advantageous for Kerry, to his stronger territory of national security and terrorism.

Bush, who roadtested some of his debate strategy in a pair of rallies on Tuesday, is expected to paint Kerry as an extreme liberal, with a 20-year Senate record pitted with inconsistencies.

"He's been the most liberal member of the United States Senate, which means he likes to spend your money," said Bush at a rally in Arizona, using a line of attack he is certain to deploy in the debate.

Speaking earlier in Colorado Springs, the president said the two past debates have highlighted "the clear differences between the senator and me on issues ranging from jobs, to taxes to health care to the war on terror." But Kerry's aides say their man is ready, after he won the first debate in Miami, Florida, and got at least a draw in the second face off last week in St. Louis, Missouri.

The veteran Massachusetts senator will charge in the debate at Arizona State University that Bush is as stubborn and wrong-headed on the economy, health issues, and energy as the Kerry team says he has been on Iraq.

"His personal stubbornness is going to meet up with some very stubborn facts tomorrow and it is going to be very hard for him to defend his record," said Kerry strategist Joe Lockhart.

One of the most intriguing factors in the debate will be whether Kerry mentions his friend and Superman actor Christopher Reeve who died on Sunday, aged 52.

Kerry has said Reeve left a message on his cell phone after the debate last Friday, thanking him from bringing up the issue of embryonic stem-cell research, which the actor had hoped could one day lead to a cure for his spinal paralysis.

If he does mention Reeve, Kerry will have to tread carefully to ensure that he is not seen to be exploiting the actor's death for naked political reasons.

Kerry stayed largely out of sight on Tuesday, using his tried and tested method of prepping for the debate behind closed doors.

His only public appearance on Tuesday was a bike ride near his hotel in the rustic New Mexico city of Santa Fe.

Kerry decided to stay an extra night in the city, partly so he could watch on television as his Boston Red Sox baseball team took on their hated rival New York Yankees in a key postseason game.

The president, who has seen a federal budget surplus of 236 billion dollars in 2000 turn into an estimated deficit of 422 billion dollars on his watch, claimed Kerry could not be trusted to steer the US economy.

"You're not going to have fiscal sanity with John Kerry as the president. He's been the most liberal member of the United States Senate, which means he likes to spend your money," Bush told cheering supporters in Arizona.

Vice President Dick Cheney jabbed Kerry on his comment in the New York Times magazine that he wanted to reduce terrorism to the level of a "nuisance" so that it did not dominate American life.

"When was terrorism only a nuisance?" Cheney asked in Davenport, Iowa, and reeled off a list of terror attacks on US targets between 1983 and 2000, including the first World Trade Center attack and the Lockerbie bombing.

Kerry's aides have accused Bush and Cheney of twisting Kerry's remarks out of context, and see the attacks as evidence their opponents are rattled. AFP

US to probe missing Iraq nuke equipment

UNITED NATIONS—The United States said Tuesday it will conduct "a full investigation" along with the Iraqi government of the reported disappearance from Iraq's nuclear facilities of high-precision equipment that could be used to make nuclear weapons.

In a letter to the Security Council on Monday, United Nations nuclear chief Mohamed ElBaradei said satellite photos and follow-up investigations show "widespread and apparently systematic dismantlement" at sites related to Iraq's nuclear program which had been subject to monitoring by the International Atomic Energy Agency, the UN's nuclear watchdog.

While some industrial material that Iraq sent overseas has been located in other countries, he said no high-precision items—including milling machines and electron beam welders that can be used commercially and in nuclear weapons—have been found.

Since the missing equipment and material "may be of proliferation significance," he asked any country with information about the items to inform the IAEA.

Anne Patterson, the US's deputy ambassador to the UN, said the US Mission to the United Nations hadn't received ElBaradei's letter yet.

"We're anxious to see what he has to say and we'll do a full investigation," she said, adding quickly: "I mean, we'll work with the government of Iraq on a full investigation."

IAEA spokesperson Melissa Fleming said the agency's assumption is that "this was organized looting" by people trying "to make a buck" and sell equipment and material to the highest bidder.

A diplomat familiar with the IAEA, speaking on condition of anonymity, discounted suggestions that the Americans might have carted off the equipment—most of it under IAEA seals—without informing the agency.

In Washington, State Department spokesperson Richard Boucher said, "I think we share the general concern that some material might have gotten out into the market immediately after the war." AP

Iraq asks donors to speed up funds for rebuilding

TOKYO—Iraq urged international donors on Wednesday to live up their promises on funding for reconstruction work, which has been stalled by violence, saying it was the most effective way to fight extremism.

Iraqi delegates speaking at a two-day donors' meeting also urged creditors to forgive Baghdad's debt of up to $125 billion as the only way to relieve Iraq of its crushing financial burden.

The meeting in Tokyo brings together officials from roughly 55 organizations and countries, including some that opposed the US-led war in Iraq, to follow up last year's meeting in Madrid at which donors pledged around $14 billion.

Concerns about security have made donors wary of implementing their pledges, but Iraqi delegates urged them not to falter.

"Development and stability in Iraq cannot be driven forward through the barrels of guns," Deputy Prime Minister Barham Salih told the donors.

"Assistance and aid in the short term is the key to destroying the causes of terrorism. It is also the only way we can build a sustainable, long-term future for our people," he added. "I say, turn your pledges into firm commitments now." Salih added: "For those countries that held back on political or geopolitical grounds, we ask you should not withhold or delay your support any further." The donors' meeting is the first since sovereignty was handed over to the Iraqi interim government in June.

Among participants in the meeting are France, Germany and Russia, all of which opposed last year's US-led invasion and have criticized Washington's postwar handling of Iraq.

Salih later told Reuters that many parts of Iraq are already secure enough to start reconstruction work. Reuters

China nixes Taiwan's peace overture

BEIJING—China spurned Taiwan President Chen Shui-bian's peace overtures on Wednesday, accusing him of merely paying lip service to easing tensions between the two arch foes.

Chen called for peace talks with China in his National Day speech on Sunday, but asserted that the island was a sovereign nation and not a mere province of China.

"When Chen Shui-bian says he wants to ease tensions, it is false. When he says he wants independence, it is true," Zhang Mingqing, a spokesperson for Beijing's policy-making Taiwan Affairs Office, told a news conference.

Communist China has claimed sovereignty over Taiwan since their split at the end of the Chinese civil war in 1949 and has threatened to attack the democratic island of 23 million if it formally declares statehood.

Beijing is convinced Chen will push the envelope on independence in his current second and final four-year term.

Chen was pushing for Taiwan to become a normal, complete country by overhauling the island's constitution, Zhang said, adding that Taipei had sought to join the United Nations from which it was ousted in 1971 and to step up arms purchases.

"These lay bare his lies," Zhang

The spokesperson accused Chen of "sneering and maliciously attacking the mainland motherland and recklessly worsening cross-strait relations." "He has no sincerity," Zhang said when asked when China would agree to contacts with Taiwan to reduce misunderstanding.

Formal independence for the self-ruled island was the "biggest threat to peace and stability in the Asia-Pacific region ... and would only bring great disaster." "Taiwan independence (means) there will be no peace.

Splitting (means) there will be no stability," he said, but stopped short of repeating a long-standing threat to use force.

Asked if he saw anything positive or conciliatory in Chen's speech, the spokesperson said "Can you reach that conclusion from the remarks I just made? I don't think so." But Zhang said China was still committed to peaceful reunification.

He urged the island to embrace Beijing's cherished "one China" policy, which dictates that Taiwan and the mainland are part of a single country, to set aside political differences and on that basis resume dialogue as soon as possible.

In Taipei, Chiu Tai-san, vice chair of Taiwan's policy-making Mainland Affairs Council, said China just needed time to consider Chen's proposal.

"Taiwan is willing to wait patiently as China considers our call for negotiations on issues concerning the people of the two sides for the sake of cross-strait peace and stability," he said. Reuters

Questions over real site of Columbus' remains persist

SANTO DOMINGO—Roman Catholic officials opened a tomb said to contain the bones of Christopher Columbus in an annual ceremony Tuesday, a day after the Dominican government denied a Spanish request for DNA tests to determine which country has the navigator's true remains.

Cardinal Nicolas de Jesus Lopez, who holds the only key to the heavily guarded tomb, allows it to be opened every year to mark Columbus' arrival in the present-day Bahamas on Oct. 12, 1492.

A marching band played the Dominican national anthem, while a dozen armed sailors positioned themselves around the tomb. As they marched in formation, one sailor yelled: "This is where Admiral Columbus rests."

Some have raised doubt about the claim. Researchers in Spain studying genetic evidence from bone shivers allegedly belonging to Columbus and two relatives said earlier this month that preliminary data suggests the Italian explorer might have been buried in the Spanish city of Seville, not the Dominican Republic.

Both Seville and Santo Domingo have monuments to the man who led Europeans to the Americas.

In this Caribbean country, the carved bronze tomb is located in the belly of a soaring concrete monument in the shape of a cross, which at night can cast a powerful cross-shaped light into the sky.

During Tuesday's ceremony the Rev. Rafael Bello held up a large steel key for about 200 government officials, diplomats and tourists to see. As he opened the doors of the tomb, surrounded by hundreds of flowers, fighter jets and helicopters flew over the monument. It was opened in 1992 to mark the 500-year anniversary of Columbus' first voyage.

With its doors removed, visitors looked through two layers of thick glass and saw an oblong lead box less than 1 meter long containing the remains.

"It's so exciting to see this opened," said Fernanda Badoer, a 29-year-old accountant visiting from Buenos Aires, Argentina. However, in keeping with custom, no one was permitted to see the actual bones.

Spanish researchers have been petitioning the Dominican government for two years to do DNA tests.

But Sulamaria Puig, the country's deputy culture secretary, said Monday the petition was denied because she believed DNA testing methods had not advanced far enough to definitively settle the dispute. AP

About-face

BETTER late than never. The decision of the Armed Forces of the Philippines to finally court-martial Maj. Gen. Carlos E. Garcia for fraud against the government and conduct unbecoming of an officer and a gentleman is a welcome one. There is still some wiggle room left for the AFP, however, as its spokesman has mentioned the possibility that Garcia's scheduled retirement on Nov. 18 would make him a civilian, putting him beyond the jurisdiction of military justice.

While we welcome the AFP's decision to try Garcia, we question why it took so long for authorities to decide to place him on the Bureau of Immigration and Deportation's hold-departure list. This is particularly puzzling since Garcia is believed to hold a green card, or permanent US residency status, and his sons are studying in the United States, not to mention the property he and his family own overseas and their bulging foreign bank accounts. Hold-departure orders are routinely issued in many other cases, and it would seem sensible to consider Garcia a high risk for flight. While the BID says US authorities deny that Garcia has a green card, that wouldn't have prevented Garcia from claiming he had one and thus escaping from the country.

For now, as the net tightens around Garcia, it might be a good idea to post guards at the door of Garcia's UST hospital suite. The military already seemed surprised that he wasn't in Camp Aguinaldo when it ordered him confined to quarters pending court martial. And while he certainly cannot be accused of undue extravagance in deciding to stay in that particular hospital, we wonder why he is only now being confined for apnea and why he didn't decide to stay at the Veterans Medical Center. Sleep apnea is an increasingly common yet curious ailment that seems to afflict the criminally charged (recall that Mark Jimenez claimed to suffer from it), and may simply be a way of justifying the isolation of a person from prying eyes.

Indeed, Garcia has made himself very scarce to the point of avoiding even the chance to confront his accusers or give his side regarding the very serious accusations leveled against him. His avoidance has included refusing to honor an invitation from Congress, which is ironic, considering that Garcia surely remembers the time when military "invitations" were something no one could refuse. He has displayed what he perhaps views as a withering contempt for the accusations against him, although other things could be said of his not wanting to say anything in his own defense. While silence as an admission of guilt is only for the sensationally inclined, we do wonder why he hasn't bothered to speak out in his own defense.

In response to Garcia's silence, every Tom, Dick and congressman (and senator, too), in our typically loquacious republic, has decided to do the speaking—and media hogging. Everyone and anyone, it seems, is now in the know when it comes to the Garcia case. Somewhere down the line, some busybody is going to speak out of turn and leak something damaging to the case. Talk is now so fast and free that the politicians have even raised the bogey of coup attempts as the military's response to Garcia's prosecution.

Raising the specter of military adventurism as a response to Garcia being charged is reckless and imprudent behavior. It is reckless because it adds political color to a case that every right-minded Filipino, regardless of political leanings, should be concerned about. It is imprudent because it insults the military. Everyone knows there is corruption in the officer corps (and surely within the ranks of enlisted men and women, too), but to say the military is poised to lash out because a general has been charged with crimes paints the entire AFP as solely concerned with guarding the fruits of some officers' corruption.

Who would move to try to topple the state in defense of a general accused of corruption? Other generals in danger of being charged with the same thing? And would this mean all generals, and below them, other officers and their troops, who might presumably be nervous due to their complicity in corruption?

This is too much. Even if officers were foolhardy enough to try to cause trouble, no one would follow them. This is the worst time to try anything: the military has no moral ascendancy at this time. It can't even pretend to have any at this point.

Can of worms

VIEWPOINT

Juan L. Mercado

WHOEVER President Macapagal-Arroyo picks to oversee the country's second largest international airport, which handles 2.27 million passengers a year, will find a can of management worms waiting.

If Tourism Secretary Ace Durano is right, the President is set to name retired Air Force general Adelberto Yap manager of the Mactan-Cebu International Airport Authority.

The Cebu airport is a major transport hub for the whole country. MCIAA services 12 domestic and foreign airlines with direct services to Singapore, Malaysia, Korea, Japan and Hong Kong.

The new man will find the Authority saddled with P1.41 billion worth of untalibed property and P2.45 million of its anti-hijacking trust fund garnished. Aircraft rescue equipment worth P30.8 million is rusting away. And Lapu-Lapu City seeks to seize P1.08 billion of MCIAA property to offset overdue land taxes.

MCIAA's books "do not present fairly the (airport's) financial position," Commission on Audit's Ma. Cristina Dinagiba told airport directors, including the mint-new Cebu Gov. Gwendolyn Garcia. Some P137.5 million in receivables could bounce.

"Buildings and structures, amounting to P1.41 billion, were not recorded," COA's officer in charge noted. Thus, the P2.04 billion listed under "Property, Plant and Equipment," in its books, is "materially understated."

Philippine Airlines and Waterfront Hotel are two of the biggest debtors. Yet, they're spared paying the automatic 2 percent monthly penalty for delayed payments, COA notes. "Without need of formal advice," other concessionaries are dunned. That's what MCIAA Administrative Order 1990 mandates.

Thus leak drained P3.53 million from airport funds last year. Yet, the board never asked: who excised that provision from PAL and Waterfront contracts? "Revisit the contracts to see if they were properly authorized," COA suggested.

While at it, MCIAA should resolve a festering 11-year question: does PAL now owe another P18.2 million in value added taxes? These are for use of MCIAA's passenger boarding bridges, check-in counters, lots, etc. But in October 1993—seven years after the dictatorship collapsed—PAL claimed Presidential Decree 1590 exempted it from VAT.

The board never asked for the BIR exemption papers. Show it now, COA urges. Or has the BIR commissioner resolved this decade-old issue once and for all.

Will board have the guts to do that? Its compliance with previous COA recommendations was lukewarm and partial. Nor has it collected P90.2 million in overdue IOUs. Trade and business offices racked up P88 million of those debts, overdue for four to 60 months.

Deputy House Speaker Raul del Mar shepherded the airport charter into the law books. He envisioned an Authority run professionally by career staff, hewing to civil service rules.

Politicians instead shoved proxies into position. President Fidel Ramos prodded a subservient board into buying a $7.86-million 412EP helicopter. It over-rode then finance officer Josefina Villasin's protest that the bill would bankrupt the Authority.

The chopper was for "rescue missions"—this was the excuse. But it never flew a mercy mission, COA auditor Roberto Panesa wrote. It ferried presidential parties instead. And crew hotel bills were passed on to MCIAA. Malacaiyang finally took over, but not before Authority tills were bled white.

If named, Yap takes over, while former manager Angelo Verdan battles before the Appeals Court, Civil Service Commission Karina

David's ruling: he lacked qualifications. But qualified MCIAA career executives, who applied, were ignored. Is Yap facing turbulence over his civil service credentials?

In this devil-take-the-hindmost climate, services deteriorated. Airlines complained Runway 04 was so rutted it threatened life and aircraft.

Lapu-Lapu City claimed 24 lots and three buildings to make up for unpaid land taxes. MCIAA bucked that in court, claiming national government is tax exempt. Where law falters, innovative negotiations can succeed. But there's little of that.

It racked up, meanwhile, P15.9 million in "irregular" expenses: from a P584,000 increase in honoraria for board members to P7.4 million in rice allowances as political chips COA disallowed both.

MCIAA employs 150 cops. But it ladled out P6.96 million last year to Centurion Security Agency to post additional "blue guards." MCIAA now has a security force equal to Amsterdam's International Airport, critics claim. As the 9th airport worldwide, Schiphol serves 30.3 million passengers.

Every international passenger departing Mactan pays a P550 terminal tax. Of that, P60 is clipped for the Trust Fund for the National Commission on Anti-Hijacking and Terrorism. Nonetheless, a Cebu judge ordered that P2.45 million of it be garnished. It's to pay the Mactan Employees Mutual Association's legal counsel who argued for cost-of-living allowances.

"Inappropriate," snapped COA. In 2000, the Supreme Court reiterated the rule that government properties or public funds are not subject to garnishment. The case is now with the Court of Appeals.

While a fighter squadron commander, Yap caught national attention by openly defying the Marcos dictatorship. That may be child's play compared to beating down thieves who masquerade as MCIAA's friends.

Dreams

THERE'S THE RUB

Conrado de Quiros

I don't know that we need another performer in our midst. But clearly Trias' appeal lies beyond her musical abilities. She has been mined for something else, and that is the Great Filipino Dream.

That Great Filipino Dream used to be the exclusive franchise of Nora Aunor. She was the biggest thing there was in the late 1960s and early 1970s, and continued to have a strong fan base for decades (I know that she had the longest running TV show, "Supernova"). To this day, she continues to have a fanatical following, though a much diminished one. The essay that won First Prize in the recent Palanca Awards (I was one of the judges), Wilfredo Pascual Jr.'s "Devotion," dealt precisely with that phenomenon. One urban poor resident had literally devoted her life to collecting every bit of paraphernalia of her idol.

Aunor, of course, captured the imagination of the masses for a couple of things. The first is that she came from a dirt-poor family, she herself spending her childhood running after trunks to sell water to thirsty travelers. The second was that she had a great voice. Bray's appeal lay in that he essayed movie characters that clawed out of poverty with pluck and fist. Aunor's appeal lay in that she was a real person who clawed out of poverty with pluck and voice. Those are the two things Filipinos pride themselves in, their ability to fight and their ability to sing. For millions of starving Filipinos, Aunor represented the Great Filipino Dream, getting out of the rut through song. Many of her early movies dwelt on that theme.

Trias may just have stolen the crown from her, representing as she does the 21st-century Filipino Dream. That Filipino Dream consists of several things.

The first is living in America and preferably being an American citizen. That is what Trias does and is. Though she is as brown as Aunor and loves Filipino food as much as Aunor, she is an American citizen and speaks with an American accent. But nobody cares. The universal indifference to her nationality is patent in all the local write-ups, where no one describes her as American. For all her nationality and accent, she is deemed Filipino to the core.

(That is true as well, incidentally, of Alex Pagulayan, the billiards standout. Filipinos cheer for him wherever he goes, notwithstanding that his papers say he is not a Filipino but a Canadian. For most Filipinos, his being Canadian means nothing. He remains Filipino at heart.)

The second is making it big in America. That is an ambition that has eluded Filipinos, whether it be those living in America, who are citizenship-wise no longer Filipinos but Americans, or those living in the Philippines. This country has not lacked for artists and writers and professionals who have dreamt of making it big in the US, and failed. Some years ago, Lea Salonga achieved phenomenal success in that respect, shining in "Miss Saigon" and taking Disney by storm. She did become the toast of the town, too. But she didn't look as brown as Nora Aunor and wasn't as plebeian as Nora Aunor. She captured the middle class but not the masa. Trias has done both.

The last is making it big in America, or anywhere else in the world, through the one thing Filipinos are good at, or believe with religious fervor they are good at, which is singing. More than fist, voice has become the ticket Filipinos believe will get them through the trials and tribulations of life. Trias got near to bagging the "American Idol" trophy through it, and for most Filipinos that is more than good enough. It is the stuff of which their dreams are made.

Some, of course, will have other words for dreams. But let us leave that tomorrow, for when the sun breaks and reality creeps in.

American accents get jobs

THAT there is corruption in the military cannot be denied. Why wouldn't there be when there is corruption in the civilian sector, too. After all, the military is just a part of our society. But instead of accusing the military wholesale of corruption, which is unfair to the thousands of officers and rank-and-file personnel trying to do their job honestly, thoughtful observers seek to look into the causes. For instance, some observers point out that the "revolving-door policy" of this administration whereby AFP chiefs of staff hold the post for only very short periods gives rise to a lot of questions. From the time, President Macapagal-Arroyo assumed office in January 2001 until June 2004, there have been five chiefs of staff: Diomedeo Villanueva, who assumed office in February 2001 and retired in May 2002, and then came in quick succession Roy Cimatu, Benjamin Defensor, Dionisio Santiago and the incumbent Narciso Abaya, who got the post late in 2003 and is retiring in a few weeks' time upon reaching the mandatory retirement age of 56. Defensor served for the shortest period, about three months.

The short stints of these AFP chiefs doubtless have prevented them from effecting meaningful reforms, and this could have encouraged some corrupt officers to engage in nefarious schemes. The officer who is now on the hot seat, Maj. Gen. Carlos Garcia, assumed the AFP's J-6, in charge of procurement, on March 28, 2001 and held it until he was relieved by Abaya on March 20, 2004. Thus, he served all five chiefs of staff appointed by Ms. Arroyo. The adverse effects of this policy have prompted the suggestion that the chief of staff should get a fixed term of three years, even if this would mean his continuing to serve beyond age 56. I support this proposal.

Deputy Chief of Staff and AFP spokesperson Maj. Gen. Edilberto Adan has also pointed out the need for "systemic reforms" in the military. For instance, he noted that at times various units need vehicles and equipment like air-conditioning units, but their acquisition is not provided for in the budget. This predicament sometime forces officials to exchange the budget items for those that are more needed. This is the "conversion" system which, as Adan has admitted, might have encouraged some unscrupulous officers to monkey around with some funds.

The problem with over-sensationalizing the inquiry into military corruption is that it could divert the attention of Congress from the more urgent task of passing the tax measures badly needed to address the budget deficit and debt servicing. Several international credit-rating agencies have threatened RP with a downgrade of its credit rating if these measures are not passed within the year. This is most serious, for as one economist has pointed out, a downgrade by even one percentage point would raise our interest payments by P20 billion. Mamaw kayo sa bayan, members of Congress.

Some months back, we visited one of the biggest call-center operations here, PeopleSupport Company, courtesy of its GM Bong Borja. My brother Benjie Olivares, who is based in Los Angeles, was just floored to realize that many of the people answering US clients' requests for information and services, including flight bookings, are Filipinas working right in Makati and other cities in the Philippines. Cecile Alvarez and I invited Jeannette Carillo and Gina Arzuiza of the Board of Investments to our d2RH show where they talked about the exciting prospects of call centers, medical transcription, animation and related fields. At present, the Philippines ranks No. 3 in the information/communication technology industry, but there's a lot of room for growth. For instance, India now has 96,000 "seats" versus about 56,000 for RP by the end of this year, but many US clients are now turning to the Filipinos whose accents are easier for them to understand.

We asked Carillo why Filipinos are being preferred. She said it's because of our proficiency in English and familiarity with American culture as well as our people's ability to learn very quickly. After six to eight weeks of training they are ready to handle the job. Cecile especially liked the fact that unlike the OFW phenomenon, this sunrise industry brings jobs to our shores, keeping families intact. Moreover, it employs our young people in a high-tech way (they have to have computer and language skills, plus a medical background for med-transcription). But we also pointed out that the Departments of Education and of Trade and Industry ought to popularize access to these new jobs by providing more opportunities for young people all over the country to study ICT courses under some kind of study-now, pay-later plan. More on this later.

Beating everyone to the bazaar season, the United Nations Development Fund for Women (Unifem), headed by its indefatigable president Georgitta "Beng" Puyat, is holding a bazaar this Saturday, Oct. 16, from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the Makati Sports Club on L.E. Leviste St. corner Gallardo in Salcedo Village, Makati. The Unifem bazaar will feature new and unusual items as well as traditional bestsellers in some 115 booths, including furniture and home decor, crafts such as hand-painted Russian dolls and silver pieces from India and Cambodia, silk and wool Tibetan fabrics, our own pina, etc. Unifem is a fund specifically set up to improve the status of women and foster women's empowerment and equality with the opposite sex. This includes the recently concluded Gender Justice Awards launched to increase the awareness of judges and motivate them to render fair decisions on cases of violence against women. Predestination

ROBERT Louis Stevenson studied law and ended up as an acclaimed writer. David Duchovny has both a bachelor's and a master's degree in literature from prestigious American universities, and now he is a famous television star. Madonna is said to have aspired to be a nun, but became instead one of the most enduring (and do I hear raunchiest?) singing idols of our generation.

These people have achieved something entirely different from the career paths they initially chose for themselves or aspired for. Was it their destiny? Were they really destined to be what they have become without taking an active part in making their careers?

I really am no big fan of this grand cosmic theory called "destiny." I am a firm believer in self-determinism. I abhor the idea that I have no control over my life and my future and that a force or power is controlling me without my knowing it. I just hate it when people say: "Well, I think it's destiny" or "It was not really meant for me. I think this is it for me." I don't think "destiny" should be used as a justification for capitulation. But the way things are going in my life, I may have to reconsider.

I have always been fascinated with people, events, places and, of course, the written word. I think of writers as people who not only have an interesting job but also enjoy a lot of perks as they go about their work. They get to travel or see places that they are going to write about. They get invited to fantastic events which they feature in their articles or columns. They get to meet interesting people, whether famous or infamous, and write or gossip about them. They get to express their thoughts. In short, writers get to do a lot of other exciting things in the guise of doing their jobs or earning a living.

So I had programmed my mind to become a writer or journalist and to make writing my life work from way back when I was that small.

But the universe did not conspire with me to have my wish fulfilled. I can't explain what happened, but I wrote something else on my college application form. I was admitted to the UP School of Economics on a scholarship.

Taking up a quota course in the state university on a full scholarship may be propitious for some, but it was not like that for me. I wanted to change my course when I was in second year. I threw up (I'm exaggerating, of course, but just a little) every time I encountered graphs and mathematical formulas or heard the phrase "supply and demand." Sadly, however, one of the conditions in my scholarship contract said that I could not shift to another course except for "meritorious reasons." I had no due what constituted "meritorious reasons," but it was clear to me that if I shifted to another course, I would forfeit all the benefits I was then enjoying. (The stipend was not much, but for a probinsyano with limited moolah, it was quite substantial.)

I was disappointed, nay, devastated. Relying mostly on that scholarship to get me through college, I grudgingly continued and finished my course.

I was determined to correct that major slip-up. But then again the universe would not conspire with me. Another twist in my life led me to law school.

My decision to take up law was due to insistent demand—from my parents. My decision to stay in law school is, aside from parental expectations, is now due to my desire to have a title as well as economic considerations. (Let you forget, we live in a title-obsessed country and job opportunities still favor traditional occupations.)

Yet, the little voice within my heart refuses to shut up. During my first term as law school senior, I desperately wanted to satisfy my longing to write. So I looked for a writing job. Luckily, I was accepted as a writer for the youth section of one of the country's major dailies.

But again, the universe would not conspire with me. My grades were anything but excellent. They screamed: "Shape up or get kicked out." I had to choose between the writing job and my studies. I couldn't drop out when I was so close to earning my degree. More than that, given the accumulated sum they already spent on my education, it would drive my parents berserk if I told them I was throwing in the towel to chase a long-suppressed dream. On my part, the difficulties I had gone through were too great to be wasted. So I resigned from my writing job which, for me, was tantamount to giving up my dream of ever becoming a writer.

I am probably not destined to become a writer. I am probably destined for something else. Hard as I try to chase my original goal in life, everything just does not seem to lead me to it.

So what's kufow happening in my life and what is now leading me to my destiny?

In the great debate between destiny and self-determinism that is raging in my head, the former is starting to gain the upper hand. I think I'll soon be forced to admit that I am not the captain of my ship and the master of my soul.

But again since this is seeing print, I think I'll have to reconsider.

Terence Eyre Belangoy, 26, is taking up law at Far Eastern University, after finishing BS Business Economics at the University of the Philippines.

New book on family violence

A FEW months ago, I spent a day at Bukid Kabataan in Cavite. The place is home and school for abused kids, run by the Good Shepherd Sisters.

One cute little boy there was known for wringing the necks of ducklings and chicks that happened to wander his way. "I can't help it, S'tee," he would explain.

This boy is a survivor of family violence. And the book that is the subject of this column is right up his alley.

No fancy title for this book. "The Path to Healing: A Primer on Family Violence" (121 pages, Anvi Publishing) is what it says it is. Written by psychologists Dr. Lourdes A. Carandang and Beatrix Aileen L. Sison, the book is a timely offering in this day and age when women are coming out of closets, bedrooms, basements and prison-homes to talk about their bloody ordeal in the hands of their spouses and partners. Timely, too, because the number of children who are victims seems to be increasing. The children are, in fact, the main focus of the book.

The book will be launched soon and is now available in bookstores. Are you in need of help or helping someone? "The Path to Healing" is for you.

It is important to stress that the book is the result of in-depth research and intervention of the authors with families exposed to different forms of abuse. And so the extensive use of quotes from the subjects themselves.

It is based on a pioneering research that focused not just on the abused children and the abusive parents but also on other key family members. It uses the family systems approach, which is based on the belief that any stress, pain or joy experienced by one member affects all other members—"ang sakit ng kalingkangan ay nararamdaman ng buong katawan."

The family, the so-called basic unit of society, is under siege not just from without, but, more alarmingly, from within. And so the book aims to empower family members by providing a good understanding of child abuse and the dynamics of family violence.

How and why does abuse happen? How can

HUMAN FACE

family members work together to stop and prevent any form of violence on a family member? What alternative and non-violent ways could be used to resolve conflicts?

The book's authors let the reader enter the inner world of families where abuse occurs. They present real-life cases and use comics-type illustrations and diagrams to show the dynamics in a family. They also delve into the family origins of the parties involved. This is to show the roots of the violent tendencies in the distant past.

Often used are Filipino phrases (translated into English) which reflect the subjects' way of thinking, for example, "sinapihan ako ng demonyo" (I was possessed by the devil). Many tips and points for reflection are also in Filipino, something counselors and therapists might find practical to use.

The book defines and tackles the four different forms of abuse: physical, sexual, verbal and emotional. It examines the intergenerational patterns, the family myths, the quality of a marital relationship, child-rearing practices, the family situation (poverty, number of children, etc.), substance abuse and other related problems of the perpetrator of violence.

The little chapter on family myths is peppered with quotes that show beliefs that have not helped in curbing violence. Examples: "Ang anak ang bubuhay o sasagip sa pamilya." (The child supports or saves the family.) "Kayang mag-ang ang magiging asawa ka. Hindi magkakaleyo ang tingin ka sa'yo." (Both of you, mother and child, will be my spouses. You both look almost the same to me.) "Kakambal ka ang kamalasan sa buhay." (Misfortune is my twin.) "Hindi ako mabubuhay kung wala ang kasamang lalaki." (I cannot live without a man.) "Ang pamilya ay dapat magkasama paraan." (The family should always be together.) "Ang babae sa bahay lang." (The woman is only for the house.)

The book is not all sob stories. The chapter "Resiliency Factors: How People Survive the Abuse" points to the innate strengths of children that should be harnessed. Children's natural ability to play, dream hope and bring delight, their courage to speak the truth—all these draw from a deep source that adults should recognize.

It goes without saying that a mother's strength and the support system which extends to the community (the media included) are vital in order that children survive and transcend their ordeal.

What can families do now? The book answers this by offering ways of dealing with family conflicts. It has do's and don'ts in dealing with children and tips, many in Filipino, for improving the marital relationship.

The appendices contain the outline of modules on the family offered by a team of psychologists led by Carandang, a veteran in family and child counseling. There is even a script for a skit that could be used as a basis for discussion and reflection.

Laws have been enacted and refined to help women and children who have been battered and to protect those who might be in danger. But what steps can one take when faced with violence? More important, what is there to know so that the victims and their supporters could take the proper action? And most important of all, how to heal? Of what use are the legal action, the vindication, and even putting an end to the violence if there is no healing of the unseen inner wounds that have been inflicted?

For the cycle of violence to end and in order to heal well, one must also know and understand.

Carandang and Sison's book is chock-full of insights and how-to's. It avoids the jargon of therapists, is very Pinoy and easy to read. This is one book that should be left lying around in unlikely places for anyone to pick up and read.

Beer nation

THE LONG VIEW

Manuel L. Quezon III

Hawaiian shirts (not to mention Ray-Bans) sported by brash leaders like Arsenio Lacson.

Consumed in the city, drunk in the barrios, probably even guzzled down during the anti-Huk campaigns, beer, glorious beer was—the drink of choice. I remember the antics of my cousins as they drank their Pales Pilsen, even as they fondly spoke of the beers of their lives: "Hijo, one of them said, pointing to the bottle beside his mug, 'I've been drinking this stuff for 50 years. Even the bottle hasn't changed.'"

The Liberation era, which gave way to the Mambo era, when the hot polloi baptized the bakycrowd—ruled the roost; thence to the Yeba years which collided in a flurry of placards with the First Quarter Storm, was accompanied with a golden, bubbling, flowing river of beer. Then it came to pass that the Filipino people were asked for love of country to give up their beer.

Many a beer-drinker who lived through the days of Edsa will tell you they did just that. They gave up their brew, even as their children gave up their Magnolia ice cream and other products of crony-owned corporations. Then came once again freedom, accompanied by the blessed liberation from abstaining from beer.

We are the only nation which loves its beer to the extent that we are willing to dilute it with ice—yet another Liberation heritage that has instilled in Filipinos the American yen for chilled beer without, alas, the resources needed to guarantee a fridge in every place where it is drunk. We love beer so much that women—not too long ago restricted to drinks of ill-repute, like Sangria—have finally taken to drinking beer in public; never mind that doubtful creation Lagerite, thank you. And do not forget the old wife's tale about cerveza negra being prescribed for lactating mothers. Why, even Imelda Marcos, it was said, was fond of a drink called shandy—which was formulated with an equal mix of beer and 7-Up (and this was long before the debut of that product known as Cali).

Our beers, how we love them. Beer, on which we build friendships and share a thousand laughs; beer, which fosters solidarity that can only come from helping your barabak pulke his brains out; beer, which has built character by making generations of teenagers cover up for each other to explain curfew broken and clothes soiled by beer-related youthful excesses; beer, that amber liquid which has shaped the national physiognomy in the turn of our menfolk, proudly displayed on our streets for all to marvel at.

Beer drinking is, for us, an educational experience. Gastronomical, adventure benefits from it. Science, too! Everyone has a theory about the effects of beer on human metabolism—like how draft beer affects one's stools.

The white races used to believe that our tropical climate bred indolence or, at least, made us an anemic race. An odd belief embraced even by the local breweries at the turn of the century, when they advertised the granddaddy of Cerveza Negra as an antidote to the debilitating effects of the climate. But you only have to look at your countrymen on any night, anywhere, to see that we are a people consumed with a zest for life, especially when beer flows down our throats and the alcohol mixes with the blood in our veins. Then we become vibrant, garrulous, funny and charming, withholding no secrets from our friends.

When we drink beer we drink in the stuff of our souls—now, if only we could remember everything the next morning

AS American soldiers reached the outskirts of Manila in 1945, they came upon the Balintawak Brewery, now the San Miguel brewery near Malibon. They promptly liberated the building—and its contents. Thirsty GIs swarmed into the brewery and later emerged from it, beaming and holding their helmets filled to the brim with ice-cold Balintawak Beer.

Thus was liberation heralded by boozy GIs, and thus was born one of the manifestations of the Liberation era, representing America's last colonial gift: the transformation of Filipinos into a beer-guzzling and beer-loving nation. Thus it was beer we drank to celebrate freedom in the heady days when we felt genuinely bonhomous towards those corn-fed GIs; and it was beer with which we got inebriated in order to forget the traumas of the recent past. Filipinos may not have had homes, and not much by way of independence, thanks to their liberators; but they had their beer—thanks again, if the apocryphal story is true, to our ally America. Gen. Douglas MacArthur, it was said, did his friend Don Andres Soriano a favor by commandeering C-47s to ferry bottles from the American mainland to satisfy the needs of San Miguel.

Of course, before the war, Filipinos already drank beer, but not in the coarse and extravagant manner they do today. The success of a night's drinking session is displayed in the ranks of empty bottles marshaled on tables. Beer was drunk, in the Spanish manner, with lunch.

But with the destruction of Manila, which marked the demise of the cultivated ways of our elders, a younger, brasher generation came into its own. A generation which had reached early maturity in the buy-and-sell atmosphere of the Occupation, and which held nothing sacred in a land where it had been proven—from the Fall of Bataan to the Last Stand of Yamashita—that nice people who held things sacred finished last. This was the generation which gave up their parents' white linen suits for the gaudy guayaberos and

(Dis)appointments

THE TWIN appointments of former Sen. Ramon Revilla to the Public Estates Authority and that of El Shaddad spokesperson Melquiades Robles as administrator of the Light Rail Transit Authority show that President Macapagal-Arroyo is not serious in reforming the bureaucracy and in enhancing professionalism in our public institutions. The appointments reveal the President's lack of appreciation for good governance. Revilla did not contribute anything significant in his 12 years in the Senate. The graft-ridden PEA needs some sort of a "Mr. Clean," a reformist manager and policymaker equipped with the necessary technical competence who can help shore up public confidence in this battered institution. Instead, what the public got was an aging, sickly and unqualified politician. It's politics as usual.

In the LRTA, what is needed is a good finance person with business and public management background who can provide over this agency's profitability and lead it to better financial position. Instead, what the public got was a music major and former music teacher whose only qualification is his being a member of a powerful religious organization that endorsed the President in the last election. It's politics as usual.

It seems the President just doesn't get it. The times call for a leader, not a cheap politician paying off political debts.

Diamonds in coconut

I'VE been in the United States for almost a year now and I, together with 19 other Filipino teachers, am employed here in the Navajo Indian reservation at Fort Defiance, Arizona. Like other Pinoy in foreign lands, we try to get hold of local news through Inq7.net. When I am logged on to it, I can feel that I am not that far from the nation and people I love. I can still feel the motherland's joys and pains, her triumphs and failures, and her challenges and opportunities.

One columnist that I do not fail to read is Solita Monsod. She is so inspiring a lady and I can sense the deep nationalism in her blood. I read her article about the virgin coconut oil and I am very thankful for it. Thank God, another hope for Pinoy have come up. Let's just pray to God that our farmers and scientists go into more endeavors to produce more and find more ways to turn the "miracle coconut" into a prized diamond possession of the country.

Experience speaks louder than explanation

MAY we call attention to the continued operation of the Controlled Disposal Facility in Barangay Tanza, Navotas.

There is a growing public outcry in the municipality of Obando against this project. People there have first-hand experience of how the dumpsite has adversely affected their lives. No amount of legal justification and technical explanation by the concerned public officials would change the revolting situation Obandoños have found themselves in.

It is high time that the Department of Environment and Natural Resources look into the garbage dump's ill effects on the ecosystem of Obando. It should not just pay attention to interest groups repeating the shallow and inconsequen-

Obandoños have had enough of the putrid and nauseating stench emanating from the Navotas dumpsite. This has caused various kinds of illnesses particularly among our children and the elderly. Our once flourishing and thriving marine resources, for which Obando has been well-known, are beginning to show signs of depletion due to increasing water contamination caused by the disposal facility.

We are thus calling on DENR Secretary Michael Defensor to effect the facility's immediate closure.

Suplico's reflection?

I SAW your editorial cartoon in the Sept. 30 issue of the Inquirer. The cartoon features two kettles, one identified as Government Service Insurance System president Winston Garcia and the other tagged as Iloilo Rep. Rolox Suplico. Both kettles were pointing to each other, with Garcia branding Suplico as an "extortionist" and the latter calling the former "corrupt."

While the cartoon is amusing, it suffers from a fundamental flaw. Suplico has no moral authority to call Garcia or any other government official "corrupt" because he himself is the subject of a complaint for violation of the Anti-Graft and Corrupt Practices Act. It appears from the complaint filed with the Ombudsman that Suplico threatened Kimberly-Clark Philippines Inc., an American corporation doing business in the country, with a congressional investigation into an alleged violation of the Water Utilities Act, unless the company buys a large parcel of land owned by his wife, Maria Canelo-Suplico, at an unconscionably high price.

The records speak for themselves—the resolution signed by Suplico calling for a congressional investigation of Kimberly-Clark and the deed of sale of the land bought by Kimberly-Clark and signed by Mr. Suplico himself. How the Canelo family, through their favorite son-in-law, Representative Suplico, was able to sell land to an American corporation in violation of the constitutional prohibition against the sale of real estate to foreign corporations, invites a lot of questions, too.

Perhaps, Suplico saw his reflection in the kettle symbolizing Garcia when he shouted the word "corrupt."

London foggy no more

TWO times in a period of two months I have read the words "foggy London" in the Inquirer.

Do you know that nowadays "foggy London" is a misnomer? They called London foggy in the past when there was much "smog" because of pollution. Those were the times when industrial manufacturing was on its peak. Thousands of factories produced black smoke that turned into smog because of the cold temperature, especially in the afternoon and early evenings.

Nowadays, seldom will you experience a "foggy London." We experience more foggy days in Baguio City (almost every day). Please do not use "foggy London" a third time in your paper. I'll bet there was not a single foggy day when the writer was there, ask her.

Oh, by the way, the city of San Francisco experiences more foggy days than any other city in the United States. You can count the number of days London is foggy in a year.

Thing speaks for itself

I READ the paid advertisement of the authors of the history textbook, "Asia Noon, Ngayon at sa Hinaharap." As a concerned citizen, I feel it is my duty to react. I have no pecuniary interest in the case. But I submit that the authors, in issuing the advertisement, embarrassed themselves, the institutions and the people they sought to defend.

The ad contained explanations that were supposed to rebut the contentions of Mr. Antonio Calipjo Go. However, the explanations only showed that the authors do not have a strong grasp of Filipino grammar, or are at least careless with it, a weakness that has led to the sometimes funny interpretation of the text. We base this observation on the explanations made by the authors, and while we haven't read the entire book, the explanations were self-incriminating enough, so to speak. The authors did not do themselves service by quoting a 1988 edition of an encyclopedia as primary source for a book first published in 1997.

Textbook writing is scholarly work deserving more effort than reaching for a dated encyclopedia set. The authors should have treated the Go "exposed" as feedback to be used in revising the book. Printed in 1997, the book is ready for updating, anyway. A "thank you for the feedback, we will certainly consider it for the new edition" would have been noble. They could have consulted language and history experts for a third opinion. Instead, they issued the ad which only cast further doubt on their own scholarship. May I quote from the ad: "Res ipsa loquitur." It should be Res ipsa loquitur. In English, it means, "The thing speaks for itself."

By the way, I, too, am an educator. I'd be happy to proofread the book for communication lapses, and give the Department of Education and the authors feedback, for free.

Media rarity

THIS refers to Nestor U. Torre's column, "Effects of excessive sexual content in TV shows." (PDI 9/23/04)

It's very heartening to know that there is a member of the media profession who takes time to reflect on the negative effects of a lot of sex scenes and talk in media. TV has indeed a major influence on our daily lives, especially on the youth. That's why there is a need for TV stations to be responsible in their shows. We all should aim for the well-being of our young, and this cannot be achieved if TV media do not help parents with the moral content of shows.

Kudos to Torre and may his tribe increase, for the good of society.

Autonomy not answer, say Moro rebs

DAVAO CITY—Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF) Chair Murad Ebrahim said that the rebel group would never compromise the right of the Bangsamoro people to self-determination.

In a statement sent to the Inquirer yesterday, Murad said that right should prevail and would be considered by MILF negotiators during the resumption of the peace talks.

The formal negotiations were to take place this month in Kuala Lumpur but were again sidelined by the observation of Ramadan.

Murad's pronouncement was obviously in response to criticisms he might be softening after he said that the MILF was already willing to sign a negotiated settlement with the government.

"But as we strive forward with the peace process, (it should not be misconstrued) that we will compromise our people's right (to) self-determination, as enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations," he said.

He said the MILF or any group has no "right to deprive the Bangsamoro of this right."

Murad said the MILF's stand remains and that any negotiations would "involve consultations with the Bangsamoro people."

The MILF has been fighting for an independent Moro nation but Murad earlier said the rebel group was ready to sign "a negotiated political solution that is just, lasting and comprehensive in order to terminate the age-old conflict in Mindanao."

"The most civilized and practical way to solve the Moro problem is through a negotiated political settlement . . ." he said last week prior to meeting a group of journalists in Maguindanao.

Murad said the MILF negotiating team was ready to discuss with their government counterparts the two remaining issues in the peace negotiations, which he admitted were "contentious."

"While we expect lengthy, arduous and even heated deliberations on both issues, we in the MILF are approaching the negotiating table with much hope to resolve every obstacle along the way," he said.

These were the issues on ancestral domain and the "very solution to the Moro problem."

Murad did not say what solution the MILF has been proposing.

But Ghazali Jaafar, MILF vice chair for political affairs, said this is not autonomy.

Malascanang has been pushing a draft on the expansion of the present coverage of the five-province and one-city Autonomous Region in Muslim Mindanao (ARMM) as a political package for the MILF.

Jaafar said autonomy has been proven a failure in the experience of the Moro National Liberation Front (MNLF). Allan Nawal, PDI Mindanao Bureau

MILF leader says his biggest fear is guerrillas being 'radicalized'

CAMP DARAPANAN—For more than 30 years the lush, green tropical islands of Mindanao have been the backdrop to one of Asia's longest running insurgency wars as the Muslim minority seek self-determination in a place they once called home.

Today, as Malaysian peacekeepers take up positions in some of the more turbulent areas of Mindanao, Murad Ebrahim, leader of the rebel Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF), is preparing for peace talks with the government.

And what he wants, he says, is lasting peace, one that will return some of the dignity he says his people lost first under Spanish and American colonial rule and then under Filipino rule since independence in 1946.

He wants an agreement that will not keep his followers what he calls second class citizens in this mainly Muslim corner of a mainly Christian country.

No stereotype

At 54, the soft-spoken and urbane rebel leader does not fit the stereotype of a revolutionary. He prefers neatly pressed brown safari suits and polished slip-on shoes to the combat boots and fatigues of other rebel leaders. And despite a lifetime in the bush, his language is more that of a politician than a rabble rouser.

Murad found himself thrust into the rebel leadership a little over a year ago following the sudden death of its previous chair, Salamat Hashim, from a heart attack.

At the same time he inherited the peace process Hashim had started.

Although no date has been set for the Malaysian-sponsored talks to begin, Murad expects they will do so soon after Ramadan, due to start later this week.

The rebels are sincere about wanting the peace talks to succeed, he told AFP in an interview in this camp outside Cotabato City, about 880 kilometers south of Manila. "Peace is in everyone's interest," he said.

But the peace talks could break down if the authorities see something to gain in continuing the fighting that has left thousands dead over 30 years of war.

"I believe there are elements within the administration and the military who do not want peace," Murad said, and if the peace talks, the rebels have the weapons to fight back, he said, speaking in a hut surrounded by heavily armed troops, many of whom were wearing fatigues and carrying an assortment of weapons from rocket launchers to M-16s and new mini M-16s.

Radicalization

If the peace talks fail, this could also radicalize further the Muslim youths who question the strategy of seeking a negotiated solution and drive them into the arms of Muslim extremist groups like regional terror network Jamaah Islamiyah (JI), the group held responsible for the 2002 Bali bombing and other attacks.

"One of my biggest fears is the radicalization of the younger generation by Muslim extremists. That is why this settlement is so important," Murad told AFP.

For Murad, the peace talks, if they succeed, will bring to an end a struggle for greater autonomy for the southern Muslims that has lasted all his adult life.

Forced into rebellion by the suppression of the Muslims in the 1970s, Murad is a married man with two children and three grandchildren and wants the long conflict resolved for their sake.

"The older generation, my generation, has seen its time. We have seen conflict. We owe it to this generation to resolve it," he said.

"We will talk for however long it takes. But we will not sign anything that does not meet the aspirations of the Bangsamoro people," he said.

Yearning

The term he used for his people—"Bangsamoro" or Moro Nation—reflects the yearning for recognition and status by the Filipino Muslims who account for less than five percent of the country's 84 million people and who feel that they have been marginalized for years.

The Muslims were branded "Moros", or Moors, by the Spanish colonial government after the Muslim empire that encompassed parts of Spain more than 1,000 years ago. And Muslim separatists have adopted the derogatory term as their own.

Murad said the rebels will not settle for a piecemeal agreement, as an earlier rebel group, the Moro National Liberation

ROCHEL UPUL/CONTRIBUTOR

Front (MNLF), had in 1996, only to see its agreements collapse.

"That is why the fighting continued," he said.

Much of what Murad stands for today was molded during his formative years growing up in Cotabato.

He saw then how local Muslims were being marginalized by Christians, many of whom had migrated from the northern provinces after the Second World War.

His family life was shrouded by tragedy, losing his mother when he was only one and his father, an Islamic preacher, when he was a teenager. The job of raising the family was left to his older brother.

The young Murad studied civil engineering at the Roman Catholic-run Notre Dame University in Cotabato City. He studied diligently, acquiring a good command of English that would serve him well in later life as a rebel strategist and in meetings with diplomats from the Organization of Islamic Conference.

Early roots

Despite the Christian education, Murad remained committed to his Islamic roots and was among the young Muslim student leaders who in the early 1970s formed an organization that would later become the MNLF.

The group took up arms, he said, to protect Muslims in Mindanao who were being targeted by Christian paramilitary groups controlled by the then dictator Ferdinand Marcos.

In 1978, Hashim broke away from the MNLF which had settled for limited autonomy, and formed the MILF, taking Murad with him who would rise to become chief of the MILF's armed unit and second in command behind Hashim.

"When I joined the struggle I was an orphan, had no mother, no father. In the early years not even my closest relatives knew I had joined the struggle," he said. AFP

CLARK SPECIAL ECONOMIC ZONE—The Air Transportation Office and the Civil Aeronautics Board are moving their offices here in preparation for the transfer of the Department of Transportation and Communications to this future international logistics hub. Transportation Secretary Leandro Mendoza said the transfer of the DOTC and its agencies to Clark, some 90 km north of Manila, was viable. "The future of aviation is here. We really want to be here," he said. Mendoza said the DOTC's full transfer to this economic zone would be completed in three years.

Farmers picket dam office over unpaid lands

By Tonette Orejas
PDI Central Luzon Desk

STO. TOMAS, Pampanga—Farmers demanding payment for damages resulting from the operations of the Japanese-funded Cong Dadong Dam in Arayat town picketed the National Irrigation Administration office here on Wednesday.

The picket of more than 50 farmers came even as the NIA's Pampanga Delta Development Project, under which the P3.4-billion dam was built, had closed on Sept. 30.

"Pay up!" was the single demand they wrote on empty rice sacks they carried as they marched to the NIA office.

The protesters belonged to the 81 tenants whose lands, totaling 93 hectares, have been submerged since the dam began operations in 2002. They have not been able to plant tomatoes and corn since then, they said.

Water from the converging Pampanga River and Rio Chico flow back to Barangay San Mateo in Arayat when the dam's gates are closed to maintain the 8.5-meter water level.

Since the project's completion, less than 50 NIA personnel were left to operate and maintain the dam that diverts water to 10 eastern Pampanga towns.

Tension

The dialogue turned tense several times as Ernesto Bielza, PDDP officer-in-charge, gave only guarantees to bring the farmers' demands to the NIA national office.

Five landowners awaiting payments for lands that the PDDP already paid for P1.8 million joined the protest. The lands were not occupied or affected by the dam, however.

The farmers were dismayed when Bielza admitted that the PDDP project had no more money to pay them.

PDDP reports said the government allotted P69.3 million for right-of-way (ROW) payments in 351 hectares occupied by the dam. It was named after President Macapagal-Arroyo's father, the late President Diosdado Macapagal. More ROW-related complaints were reportedly lodged with Arayat Mayor Chito Espino.

"We have waited long enough for your promise to pay us. Your office has closed and yet, we remained unpaid and unable to plant again. This is too much," farmer Ricardo Lising told PDDP officials.

Bielza reminded them that in the contract they signed, they agreed to receive financial assistance only once. That amounts to P5 per square meter.

But three barangay councilors said the farmers, most of them uneducated, agreed to get the small sum initially because they were promised that another P10 per square meter was coming as damage compensation.

Illegal fishing threatening whale sharks, NGO says

DONSOL, Sorsogon—Environmental activists pressed for government action to put a stop to illegal fishing in this town made famous by whale sharks that have made its waters a feeding ground.

They warned that unless illegal fishing was stopped, the whale sharks would leave the area and could put an end to a tourism industry that has helped this town survive economically.

Members of the Task Force Sagip Kalikasan-Bantay Karagaran said illegal fishing vessels, locally known as pangulong that uses super lights and very fine mesh nets, continue to operate in Donsol waters despite efforts to stop them.

Donsol is dubbed as the Whale Shark

Capital of the World because of the presence of the whale sharks, locally known as butanding (Rhincodon typus) in its municipal waters.

"It will greatly affect the whale sharks because the pangulong is operating directly in the municipal waters," Ding Manrique, TFSK-BK chair, told the Inquirer.

He said although the whale sharks feed on small fishes, the very fine mesh nets being used by the pangulong will also catch the whale sharks' food.

The pangulong has a fleet of three vessels, with super lights and fine mesh nets, and a carrier.

It sometimes uses a sonar boat to conceal its location while looking for a fishing spot.

"If the coastal area and the feeding ground of the butandings will be destroyed because of the pangulong operations, the whale sharks will be affected," said Jun Narvadez of Tanggol Kalikasan, which helped organize the TFSK-BK and provides training and legal assistance.

"Pangulong operations started many years ago in Donsol because of the richness of waters in different kinds of fish," according to Manrique.

There are about 15 pangulong fleets currently operating in Donsol, allegedly with protection from ranking police officials in the region, the group learned.

"Pity the small fishermen because their means of living is affected. The vessels sometimes fire guns at them or hit them with their bigger vessels and they end up going home without a catch," he said.

Manrique said they are rendered virtually helpless against the operators because the illegal fishers are armed and the police are not helping them.

"Sadly, we have the PNP in our composite team but they seem to abandon us when we ask for assistance," Manrique said.

He revealed that they requested assistance from the municipal police on Sept. 6 but were told that a unit from the region will help them instead. Enir Emano Gamis, PDI Southern Luzon Bureau

Project stirs hope for Bicolanos

By Juan Escandor Jr.
Pili, Camarines Sur

PRESIDENT Macapagal-Arroyo's visit to Camarines Sur on the Feast of the Nuestra Señora de Peñafrancia last month brought hope to several Bicolano leaders, when she approved the World Bank-funded $30-million project for the region's river basin area.

The Bicol River Basin Watershed Management Project (BRBWMP) aims to solve the periodic flooding in the area that hinders farm productivity. President Arroyo said the project would make use of excess water for farm production.

Bicol's river basin is a wide plain that straddles Albay and the two Camarines provinces, and nestles in the middle of the Bicol Peninsula.

It is a 377,000-hectare area that easily inundates from the run-off waters and floodwaters coming from the mountain range that stretches from Mayon Volcano, in the southern portion, up to the mountains north of Bicol.

The Bicol river basin is described as the drainage area of the Bicol Peninsula that has meandering rivers, which empty in San Miguel Bay on the northeastern part of Bicol.

Due to this periodic flooding, this huge area, with several major rivers and three of the four lakes in Bicol, has been a big challenge to development planners since the Marcos regime.

The perennial flooding is a natural phenomenon dictated by the geographical configuration of the area.

Also, this wide swath of low-lying areas is regularly ravaged by periodic floodwaters because it lies in the typhoon path.

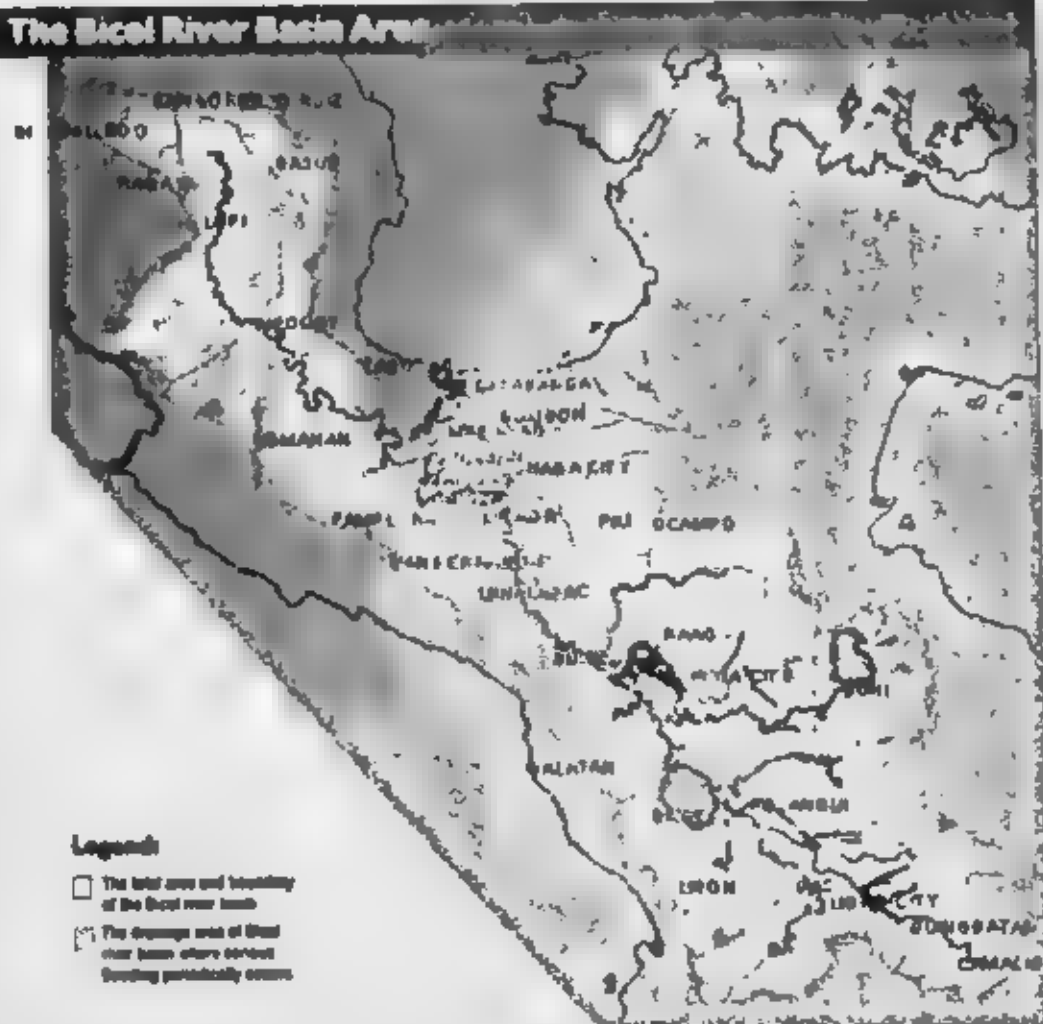

To control the flooding, the government tried an integrated area development (IAD) approach in 1973.

But the first IAD project called the Bicol River Basin Development Program (BRBDP), a multi-million-dollar project that the Asian Development Bank funded, failed to achieve its major output: a huge reservoir in the middle of the Bicol river basin area.

Very much costlier than the BRBWMP, the BRBDP failed to deliver the central infrastructure component designed to pool the run-off waters and floodwaters in the area.

The national government was forced to abandon the project in 1989 because of the ballooning costs of the infrastructure component estimated in 1992 at $274 million.

But the BRBDP was not a complete failure. Much of its irrigation facilities and flood mitigation infrastructure requirements were installed in the 16 years of its implementation.

Four-pronged approach

At present, the government uses a four-pronged approach to achieve its objectives within six years.

It will also make use of the lessons of the first IAD project and build on the existing irrigation and flood mitigation facilities.

Estimated at P2.6 billion, the BRBWMP is expected to benefit some 1.3 million Bicolanos dependent on agriculture.

The rehabilitation of irrigation facilities and flood mitigation measures, adoption of comprehensive watershed management plan and creation of definite policy-making body overseeing the development thrust, are expected to result in increased farm productivity.

Unlike the old IAD project, the BRBWMP avoids changing the flow of water. The notion that a huge reservoir in the middle of the Bicol river basin area could control the floodwaters was scrapped. Instead the government is designing impact projects at the grassroots level to adopt to and make use of the natural pattern of flooding.

The briefing document given during President Arroyo's meeting with local executives and regional directors involved in the project said the BRBDP had been projected to incur high social costs to achieve its goal.

The creation of the huge reservoir would have displaced 2,337 households in an area designed as water "catchment." The toll on farm production was estimated to be equivalent to 5,360 hectares of farmlands permanently submerged in water.

Watershed management

Camarines Sur Second District Rep. Luis R. Villafuerte Sr., one of the prime movers of the new IAD approach under the BRBWMP, said the old IAD concept of controlling flooding by mainly installing flood control structures failed because it wanted to tinker with the natural flow of floodwaters. He said it would have cost the government now some P15 billion to complete those structures.

Villafuerte, who has followed through the BRBDP when it was implemented starting from the Marcos regime to the Aquino administration, said the first IAD approach's central output was transforming Lake Baao and its surrounding villages into a huge reservoir.

The reservoir would catch all the run-off waters and floodwaters to Baao town's phantom lake or a lake that shrinks during summer. It failed in social acceptability, he said.

He said the new project will not attempt to divert the natural flow of floodwaters draining at San Miguel Bay but would rather focus on watershed management to mitigate flooding.

This new approach will be carried out by local government units (LGUs) and the Department of Environment and Natural Resources.

It requires the partnership of the LGUs to employ a community-driven strategy of managing and utilizing the resources within the Bicol river basin area.

The project demands the full participation of 33 municipalities and 3 cities in Albay and the two Camarines provinces in the northern portion of Bicol.

The 36 LGUs are further required to provide area-based watershed management plans to come up with a comprehensive plan of the Bicol river basin area.

At the project's completion, a policy-making body would be created to direct the developmental path within the Bicol river basin area.

Project management

They also agreed to spend for the project on areas and activities that are devoted, including communal forest management and development, livelihood and basic infrastructure projects.

The President has already created the Project Management Office (PMO) under the DENR. She ordered that the project management officer will assume the rank of an undersecretary.

There will also be an assistant project management officer and 15 technical staff who shall be seconded to the project on full-time basis.

It will also involve the participation of the National Irrigation Administration and the Department of Public Works and Highways for the infrastructure facilities development, rehabilitation and maintenance.

Being an IAD approach, the BRBWMP is composed of inter-related components designed at improving the management and use of the resources within the Bicol river basin area.

For one, the irrigation modernization component at the cost of P211.2 million, when completed, would double agricultural production in the area.

The encroachment of saline water in thousands of hectares of rice farms in the towns of Cabusao, Libmanan and Calabanga and Naga City, in Camarines Sur, once corrected through the fixing of gates that control the inflow of sea water from San Miguel Bay, would increase areas planted with rice the whole year round.

But some original structures of irrigation facilities have been left un-repaired since they were abandoned in 1989, so that the inflow of seawater to the farms became permanent at the expense of big losses of crops.

Also incorporated in the infrastructure components of the BRBWMP are flood mitigation measures at an overall cost of P1.4 billion.

Elected officials involved in the preparation of the BRBWMP interpreted the President's go-signal to the project as a shift in the program priorities of the national government.

The President has hastened BRBWMP's implementation by two years, to start this year instead of 2006.

"The BRBWMP has stirred great hope for Bicolanos because we believe this is our last chance to accelerate development, if not, it would be very hard for us to keep pace with the other regions in the country," Villafuerte said.

For several years now, Bicol has remained the second poorest region in the country with very sluggish economic growth totally dependent on agriculture, second to the war-torn region of the Autonomous Region of Muslim Mindanao.

The implementation of the BRBWMP is projected to generate P580.9 million as "economic internal rate of return," which is expected to prime the ailing Bicol economy.

Roco foe to head new Bicol project

By Alan Pelayo
Naga City

THE BICOL River Basin and Watershed Management Project (BRBWMP) is actually President Macapagal-Arroyo's fulfillment of her campaign promise to the Bicolanos to revive the mothballed Bicol River Basin Development Project (BRBDP).

But her appointment of then Bicolano presidential candidate Raul Roco's foe, resigned Department of Education Undersecretary for Legal Affairs James Jacob, as BRBWMP chair is seen as another case of political accommodation.

Differences

Jacob resigned from DepEd due to policy differences with Roco, then DepEd secretary.

He tangled with his fellow Bicolano over the controversial purchase of medical equipment of the University of Santo Tomas.

At the height of the presidential campaign, Jacob spoke out over local media here against his differences with Roco.

Jacob, a former Camarines Sur representative, admitted his lack of technical expertise to head the project, but he accepted the appointment anyway.

He said the funding of the project will be loaned from the World Bank but he refused to disclose how much he will get as chair of the foreign-assisted project.

He also denied that his appointment is a reward for his support to the President's candidacy in the last presidential election.

Butch dela Torre of Ibon Foundation Philippines, however, was not happy about the project.

He said all the foreign-assisted projects in Camarines Sur, specifically the BRBDP, were a total failure.

He said several farms in Camarines Sur and other provinces in Bicol were damaged because salty water passed through their farms.

He urged Jacob to disclose the results of the previous projects.

Neenita Fuentebella-Pefones, former BRBDP executive, came to the project's defense, saying the problem was not with the BRBDP but with the line agencies implementing it.

Glossary bats for media sensitivity in child abuse reports

SOON, reports on child abuse would, hopefully, be handled properly by Bicolano journalists, with the recent launching of the Glossary of Terms for Child Abuse Media Reportage, in Legazpi City.

The glossary advocates the use of precise terms in the reporting of child abuse cases and discourages sensational treatment.

The launch was made during the 12th National Children's Month celebration in Bicol on Oct. 8. The celebration was headed by the Regional Sub-Committee for the Welfare of Children (RSCWC) Region V.

The "Glossary of Terms for Child Abuse Media Reportage" is the first of its kind in the country, according to John Abejuro, executive secretary for operations of the Social Action Center (SAC) of the Diocese of Legazpi, one of the sponsors of the glossary.

Ma. Elena S. Caraballo, National Council for Welfare of Children director, confirmed that the glossary is indeed the first of its kind in the country.

"Because the country is very rich in language and dialects, it is just appropriate that we have such reference book for everyone," she said.

The glossary defined common terms on child abuse and gave corresponding translations in the Bicol dialect.

Instead of "pagtakma" or "paggumos," it would simply be "paghipo" for act of lasciviousness. "Pagtakma" is a rude term for grabbing while "paggumos" means to crumple. It should be "pasakit sa aki" in place of "makahayop na trato sa aki" (child cruelty), "adik" for "paratsongki" or "apay-apay" (drug user); "pamilyang nasa krisis" for "burulag na pamilya" (dysfunctional or broken family); "hinapros" or "kinaputan" for "linamotak" or "kinaplatan" (fondled); "may kapansanan" for "daging silbi" or "biyadi" (incapacitated); "munatratro" for "inayor" (molested); "minolestiya" for "linamotak" or "minustakan" (molested).

In the absence of precise Bicolano words, journalists are advised to use the original English term, such as illegitimate, incest, mentally retarded, or rape.

The glossary is a reference not only for media practitioners but also police officers and social workers.

Abejuro said sensationalism in reporting of violence committed against children, along with the indiscriminate use of terms in doing so, has led to victims—both children and parents—fearing to talk about their experiences.

He said this also "threatens children and creates a culture of fear."

Lourdes Losraño of the Legazpi City Social Welfare and Development, one of the contributors to the book, said repeated indiscriminate broadcast of abuse cases replicates the abuse committed against children.

The book was turned over to Albay journalists, represented by Inquirer correspondent Ronnie Lorejo.

In his acceptance speech, Lorejo said reporters sometimes tend to use "foul" language in their reports about violence committed against children in their attempt to show the "drama" in such cases.

Children who have been abused thus become victims the second time around simply because of the wrong use of words he added.

Abejuro said the idea for the glossary was tackled three years ago, in October 2001, by journalists themselves and the Child Abuse Prevention and Intervention Unit in Albay, following the rise in child abuse cases in the province in 1997.

It came into fruition with the help of the SAC, the Department of Social Welfare and Development-Region V and other concerned units, including the Manila-based Consolacion Foundation.

GMA: I ordered court martial of Garcia

By Juliet Labog-Javellana
and Christine O. Avendaño

ADMITTING she was dissatisfied with the military's initial handling of the case of Maj. Gen. Carlos R. Garcia, President Macapagal-Arroyo yesterday said that she had to step in and instruct the Armed Forces of the Philippines to subject the general with unexplained wealth to court-martial proceedings.

The former AFP comptroller reportedly has $1.42 million worth of bank deposits in the United States and several pieces of real estate in the country and abroad.

"Well, in the case of General Garcia, I was the one who told the AFP who instructed that they have to court-martial him," Ms Arroyo said at her monthly luncheon with reporters covering Malacañang.

The President, the Commander in Chief, said she gave the order two days earlier "that's why yesterday (Tuesday) it was announced" by the AFP.

"So I'm glad that the AFP is [following]. You can see there is that discipline. They made immediate compliance with the directive," Ms Arroyo said.

Collaborators

But opposition Sen. Sergio Osmeña III said subjecting Garcia to a court martial was a "worse" decision.

"Out of delicadeza, the military should not try him because [the military officials] are all under a cloud of suspicion," Osmeña told reporters.

The senator said Garcia should instead be tried by the Sandiganbayan because the general's case involved plunder.

Osmeña said the problem of putting Garcia before a military court was that the latter would be tried by "maybe the same officers he collaborated with."

"At least to gain some credibility put it before the Sandigan," he said. "They will have a hard time acquitting him now without being suspected of having collaborated or covered up for his (Garcia's) crimes."

If the military court acquits Garcia, Osmeña said people would not believe that his trial was not fixed and this would pose some problem to the military.

Asked why she had to give the order when a court-martial was a regular mechanism in the AFP, she said: "That's not for me to theorize. For me, it's what you have to do. That's the most important thing and they have to court-martial."

The AFP initially wanted the Office of the Ombudsman to investigate Garcia.

Hand in hand

The President said the court-martial should go hand in hand with the investigation by the Office of the Ombudsman because the latter was looking into specific graft charges while the former would deal with a general charge called conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman.

Ms Arroyo said she heard about the incident in the United States where Garcia's son was accused for not declaring $100,000 in his possession.

Tactical detail

"It was all verbal and all gossip at that time and then I learned it more officially third week of September but things were still very [sketchy]. I mean Nonong (Cruz, the defense secretary) still have to put it (case) all together so now it's all together," she said.

"Again that is a tactical detail," she said when asked if the United States informed her about the general's assets. "I was informed about it by (Executive Secretary Eduardo) Ermita because he was informed by Nonong Cruz and it was a verbal information given to me because the ES informs me of things that happen around."

AFP bypassed

The US authorities also bypassed the AFP and got in touch with the Office of the Ombudsman instead. It was the Ombudsman who asked the AFP to place Garcia on preventive suspension.

Ms Arroyo was irked by questions on why the AFP did not get into Garcia's activities despite his having kept a P19-million investment at the AFP Savings and Loan Association Inc.

"Again, those are micro details. As a President it's my job to set the strategic direction, you court martial... that's my job. Bank account? That's for the due process and the court-martial to determine. That's why I instructed a court-martial to be done," she said.

Cabinet officials

Ms Arroyo also refused to say whether Garcia's case was isolated. "It's not for me to speculate," she said.

The President hinted she was not buying allegations that at least three of her Cabinet officials were under investigation by the United States for having secret deposits.

"That's precisely the speculation. I'm not going to, I mean, well, you have to distinguish between due process and speculation. We will—all the due process is being done but I stop at speculation," she said.

She said those who claim this should name "names and give something concrete."

The information on the Cabinet officials came from Rex Robles, a former military rebel whom Ms Arroyo appointed to the Pelicano Commission that investigated the roots of the coup attempt by the Magdalo soldiers in July 2003.

"Because Rex is now a private citizen, I cannot tell him what to do. But I can ask Carol Hernandez to share the findings with you because it's her job to make sure that they're carried out," she said.

Hernandez was a member of the commission.

ominous silence could turn him into a scapegoat in the web of corruption involving both low- and high-ranking officials of the AFP.

A member of the House of Representatives wants the National Bureau of Investigation or another law enforcement agency to take care of the security of Garcia citing possible threats to his life.

Life in danger

Paranaque Rep. Rolito Golez said House members had said that Garcia's life might be in danger because of the general's knowledge of corruption in the military.

"Many of the members of the House of Representatives have already expressed their concern about the security of General Garcia. It is very likely that we might ask that another body (Garcia)," said Golez, chair of the House committee on national defense.

"That will be most likely either the NBI or the police. But most likely the NBI because he (Garcia) knows many things," he said at a forum.

Golez also said it would be in the interest of the AFP that no harm comes to Garcia.

"I think it is also good for the AFP because if anything happens to General Garcia, then it is going to be a big, big problem of the AFP," Golez explained.

Vice Adm. Ernesto de Leon, Philippine Navy flag officer in command, said at the forum that Garcia was being guarded by 12 soldiers on a 24-hour basis.

He was supposed to appear before Golez' committee the other day but was rushed to the hospital instead.

For the second time, the House committees on national defense and on banks and financial intermediaries failed to compel Garcia to appear before their joint investigation of the alleged corruption in military, specifically the general's unexplained wealth.

Bank secrecy law

Worse, Rufino Ibay, president and chief executive officer of the AFPSIAI where Garcia allegedly made huge investments, invoked the bank secrecy law in refusing to divulge details of Garcia's financial transactions with the association.

Garcia, who has been confined at the UST hospital since Sunday night, was diagnosed to be suffering from "difficulty of breathing and apneic episodes."

His attending physician, Dr. Ivan Villespin, testified that Garcia was not able to make it to the hearing because of his medical condition.

Villespin is an associate professor at the UST College of Medicine and past director of the UST Center for Respiratory Medicine.

Villespin said that obstructive sleep apnea, which the general has been suffering since 2002 based on his medical records, can range from "annoying to life threatening."

IN THE KNOW

What is sleep apnea?

SLEEP apnea means "without breath," a condition in which a person literally stops breathing for a minute or so while asleep, marked by loud snoring.

Sleep apnea has three types: obstructive, central, and mixed. Obstructive sleep apnea is the most common type, in which barriers, such as a large tongue, block breathing, causing decreased oxygenation and a low blood oxygen level.

A potentially life-threatening condition, obstructive sleep apnea may pose health risks, including heart attacks, strokes, impotence, etc. It also causes daytime sleepiness that may result in accidents, lost productivity and interpersonal relationship problems.

Several treatments exist for obstructive sleep apnea, such as weight reduction, positional therapy, positive pressure therapy and even surgery. PHD Research

He said the general was also suffering from chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, and dyslipidemia. Overall, Garcia was suffering from "metabolic syndrome," he said.

Apneic episodes, he said, may cause temporary cessation of breathing and irregular heart beat.

He said that "putting a little stress" on the patient could also do him some harm.

Villespin said he was appalled by the statements by some members of the House committee during the first hearing that his patient was not really sick but may just be playing sick.

Professional

"I am a professional, your honor. I will not ruin my career. General Garcia is a first-time patient. I made the findings and his medical abstract is true. They're not manufactured," Villespin told the committee.

The doctor said that he never issued any order barring anyone from seeing Garcia in the hospital and that it was Garcia himself who would choose whom he wanted to see.

Asked if he thought Garcia could withstand the rigors of answering queries from committee members, Villespin replied, "It's not so easy. The burden of deciding whether a patient can't come here or withstand the rigors of the hearing should not rest on me. I leave that to you, sir."

But he said Garcia could testify if the latter wanted to, unless complications such as a stroke or heart attack would arise which may prompt him to advise against it.

Villespin also said that contrary to reports, it was him, not Garcia, who recommended that the latter be admitted after thoroughly examining his medical condition. He said it was a clinical judgment on his part.

Villespin said that Garcia asked him to put his diagnosis in writing and the order to admit him so that the general could present this to his military superiors.

He stressed that another doctor first examined Garcia in the emergency unit of the same hospital before the general was referred to him.

The doctor also said it was his first time to meet Garcia and that at first, he was not aware that the general was facing criminal charges and congressional investigations. Villespin said he just arrived from a medical conference in Georgia, USA.

Tongue lashing

Col. Rafael Regino, the AFP surgeon-general, also got a tongue lashing from several congressmen for his failure to carry out the order of Vice Adm. Anston de los Reyes, AFP vice chief of staff, for him to personally examine Garcia before appearing in the hearing.

According to Regino, he and Rear Adm. Mateo Mayuga, deputy chief of staff for personnel (J-1), went to Garcia in the hospital but that only Mayuga was allowed by Garcia to see him.

Regino said he could not force himself into Garcia's room as he would be violating hospital rules as well as Garcia's "civil rights."

Mayuga said he relayed the committee's wish for Garcia to testify in the hearing and that Garcia merely said he could not because of his medical condition.

The AFP judge advocate general said that the AFP cannot file a case against Garcia for court-martial proceedings without going through investigation which would require Garcia's presence to rebut the charges against him.

Congressmen repeatedly pressed De los Reyes to order Garcia, whom he placed under arrest under the custody of Camp Aguinaldo, to testify in the next hearing.

De los Reyes, who was reluctant to implement his order at the UST hospital, at first said he could only do so once the hospital allowed the discharge of Garcia.

He said the AFP has also to observe hospital rules and that it cannot just drag Garcia out of it.

In the end, De los Reyes was prevailed upon by the congressmen to issue an order to Garcia to appear in the hearing and to implement his own order.

Hearing at UST?

The House committee on national defense chaired by Rep. Rolito Golez (Kampik, Paranaque), and the committee on banks and financial intermediaries under Rep. Jaime Lopez (Lakas, Manila) insisted that the next hearing be held at 1 p.m. today (Oct. 14) at the UST hospital or at the AFP Medical Center if the first option would not be possible.

Golez said the committee would ask the UST hospital administration for permission to hold the hearing there, or just transfer Garcia to the AFP Medical Center.

Reyes total assets soared to P18M ried in the press for honestly declaring his true assets, specially the bank deposits.

"I already declared it, therefore, I am not hiding it. It was the right thing to do. It is unfair for me to be criticized for doing the right thing," he said, apparently anticipating the adverse publicity that would be created by the publication of his net worth.

Inherited

The SALN documents, which an officer of the Lifestyle Check Coalition furnished the INQUIRER, also showed that the increase in Reyes' net worth was brought about by the P6 million worth of "improvements" in his house at the AFP Officer's Village in Fort Bonifacio.

His other pieces of real property include an inherited house in San Juan, Metro Manila with a current fair market value of P50 million and an inherited lot in Paranaque with a current fair market value of P25 million.

Reyes' father Pablo was the first superintendent of the Division of City Schools in Quezon City. Pablo and Purificacion Reyes bought the property in San Juan and the one in Paranaque for P25,000 and P24,000, respectively, in 1960.

Secretary Reyes also owns two other pieces of real estate at the Officer's Village in Fort Bonifacio. Each has a current fair market value of P5 million.

Mama Gie Restaurant

Reyes' 2003 SALN also reflected the acquisition of the Mama Gie Restaurant in Cebu City and the Lola Inda Restaurant in Bulacan, all in January 2003.

The Lifestyle Check officer found this odd, noting that the Reyes family had had "no major business interest in the past."

"Two restaurants in one year and an increase of P4 million in net worth—all this while he declared his wife to be a housewife in his SALNs," said the officer, who requested anonymity.

In his 2002 SALN, Reyes did not fill in the space under the heading "Business Interests and Financial Connections."

Bad timing

Asked about the matter, Reyes said his family had been in the restaurant business for a long time now. "Matagal nang negosyo na (That's an old business of) Mrs. (Terencia Reyes) yan," he said.

Although he said he had nothing to hide about his SALN, Reyes raised apprehension over how the issue could be linked to the alleged scams involving other military generals.

"The timing is really bad," he said. "My detractors may use this when I go through the Commission on Appointments."

Reyes raised suspicions that people he had hit in his anticrime operations could be behind the issue to demonize him.

"The kidnapping lords, the smuggling lords and the crime lords could be behind this. All the lords are angry," he said.

Interviewed by the INQUIRER,

Presidential Anti-Graft Commission Chair Conne de Guzman said her office was going to look into the matter.

Revive case?

If evidence warrants, she said the PAGC may revive the administrative charge filed against Reyes in August 2003, which was filed by former PAGC Chair Dario Ramos.

Ramos had dropped the case, which was in connection with the alleged P10-million house that Reyes was building, in October 2003 after he resigned as secretary of national defense.

Pacificador acquittal shocks Javier family taken its course: "The prosecutors did their best, but the court has its own appreciation of the case."

But Gonzalez said the acquittal of the former ally of the late dictator Ferdinand Marcos would not affect the Philippine government's efforts to extradite his son and co-accused, Rodolfo Pacificador, from Canada.

He said it appeared that Rodolfo Pacificador might even be the mastermind of Javier's murder.

Gonzalez also said the government could no longer appeal Pacificador's acquittal.

"That's the end of it," he said, adding that reviving the charges against the former majority floor leader of the Batasan Pambansa would constitute double jeopardy.

Pacificador, 74, was released from the Antique Rehabilitation Center after the promulgation of the decision on Tuesday.

He said he was open to a reconciliation with the family of his political rival.

On his first day as a free man yesterday, Pacificador left San Jose at 3 a.m. and visited the northern towns of Pandan, Culasi, Sebaste, Linao-an and Barabaza to "thank the people who brought me food and visited me in jail."

Pacificador went into hiding after Javier's murder. Nine years later, in March 1995, he turned himself in at Camp Crame.

His son fled to Canada shortly after the murder and applied for refugee status.

Secretary Gonzalez said the resolution of the case could also be the basis to extradite Rodolfo Pacificador so he could face trial for the murder of Javier and the wounding of five others.

"We will analyze the decision and study our options carefully because there are many nuances in the case," he told the INQUIRER by mobile phone.

Gonzalez said he had ordered a review of the status of the extradition proceedings against Rodolfo Pacificador.

Cancel passport

He said he had also asked the Department of Foreign Affairs to determine whether the passport of the fugitive had been canceled.

Prosecution witnesses had testified that Rodolfo met with Eduardo Iran alias Boy Muslim, the alleged leader of Javier's killers, before and after Javier was gunned down on Feb. 11, 1986. Rodolfo allegedly also gave money, food and shelter to Iran and the other gunmen after the shooting.

On Oct. 19, 1996, the Canadian Justice ministry ordered Rodolfo's extradition. But the Ontario Court of Appeals reversed the order on Aug. 1, 2002, on grounds that the Philippines could not guarantee him a fair and speedy trial.

The Canadian Supreme Court affirmed the rejection of the petition in February last year.

Senior State Prosecutor Leo Dacera III said he would look into whether the petition could be revived despite the earlier decision of the Canadian courts.

He said Castrojas' decision showed that the younger Pacificador had a key role in the planning and implementation of the murder.

Based on the evidence

In his 113-page decision, Castrojas pointed out that as shown by the testimony of prosecution witnesses Arleen Limoso, Jose Delumen and Romeo Nagales, it was Rodolfo Pacificador "who ran the affairs, so to speak."

"Based on the evidence on record, it appears that [Rodolfo] was the mastermind [of Javier's killing]," Castrojas said in an interview.

However, the judge pointed out that Rodolfo had not yet presented evidence in his defense because he had yet to be arrested.

While the former assemblyman and three other accused were acquitted, Pacificador's lawyer Avelino Javellana and seven others were found guilty.

Still at large

Rodolfo Pacificador and Iran were not sentenced because they are still at large.

Castrojas yesterday issued arrest warrants for Iran, Rodolfo Pacificador and Rolando Bernardino, who escaped from detention in October last year. With a report from Philip C. Tubera treatment for his heart ailment.

Esmeralda flew to Manila yesterday to confer with Justice Secretary Raul Gonzalez on the case. He returned to Cebu in the afternoon.

He said Gonzalez had instructed him to thoroughly investigate the case and to check all possible angles regarding the motive for the killing.

Other angles

In an interview with radio station DYLA, Philippine National Police Director General Edgar Aglipay said the PNP was in fact studying other angles and not just the Ecleo case.

"The investigation is a continuing [process]," he said. "We will not close off other reasons or other motives and other suspects as far as the killing of prosecutor Yongco is concerned."

Aglipay also said it was difficult to pinpoint a specific angle in the absence of strong evidence.

Esmeralda said the sketch of Yongco's supposed killer was based on a description provided by two eyewitnesses now in NBI custody.

He said Favila's name was provided by the Criminal Investigation and Detection Group, which was later confirmed by the Criminal Intelligence and Investigation Bureau (CIIB).

The two agencies are working with the NBI to solve Yongco's murder.

Ecleo ex-bodyguard?

Esmeralda said Niño Bacolod, brother of Ecleo's slain wife, had told him that the sketch of the supposed killer resembled one of the cult leader's bodyguards. But when sought for comment, Bacolod said he was not actually sure of the gunman's identity.

He said the sketch of the supposed gunman resembled one of Ecleo's close-in security, but that he could be wrong.

Supt. Paul Labra, CIIB chief, said he gave the Yongco family's lawyer and spokesperson Liza Corro a picture of Favila, which she later showed to witnesses.

"As I perceived it, the witnesses were able to identify the gunman yesterday the picture we showed them yesterday (Tuesday) morning. I was not allowed to see and confer with the witnesses. It was Attorney Corro who relayed what the witnesses said when they saw the picture," Labra said in a phone interview.

He said that while there was "a concerted effort from the different investigating agencies," what they had was "just circumstantial [evidence]."

"Nothing is definite yet. We are still investigating," he added.

Labra said his men arrested Favila and a companion in July for carrying firearms inside a taxi in Barangay Talamban, Cebu City.

Police confiscated the firearms, along with membership cards of the PBMA Commando Brotherhood and Rubenian International, he said.

Favila and his companion were released after the city prosecutor's office dismissed the complaint of illegal possession of firearms, Labra said.

Outrage

In Manila, the Integrated Bar of the Philippines through its national president Jose Anselmo I. Cadiz said: "[We] condemn in the strongest terms the grisly killing of [Yongco], 'a lifetime member of the IBP and advocate of the rights of women and children.'"

It added: "[Her] murder has reinforced the perception of the Filipino people that there is a breakdown of peace and order in this country. When judges, lawyers and reporters are killed on a regular basis, and the list of unsolved crimes gets longer by the day, it is not unthinkable for ordinary citizens not to feel safe outside the confines of their homes."

Lawyers in Bohol also issued a statement denouncing Yongco's killing. With reports from Juanex Napalacan and Chito A. Fuentes, PDI Visayas Bureau; Leila B. Salaverria in Manila

the Philippine Heart Center.

The family requested for "private time" until the wake and interment details are finalized.

"A legal giant has passed away. He was somehow controversial during the Marcos years, but [his being] a legal luminary, no one can question that," said Justice Secretary Raul Gonzalez. "He was first among equals on matters of constitutional law. He is a great loss," Gonzalez added.

Lawyer Ismael Khan Jr., the Supreme Court's spokesperson, said, "He was a very respected chief justice who headed the court during one of the most turbulent times in the republic's history."

The high tribunal said Fernando's landmark decisions on Constitutional Law dealt with judicial review, due process, equal protection, freedom of speech, freedom of assembly, rights of an accused, social justice, labor laws, and tenancy laws.

International recognition

Internationally recognized as a legal scholar, Fernando was only one of three Asian jurists invited by the US Department of State to take part in the Bicentennial celebration of the American Declaration of Independence in 1976 with its theme, "Influences of American Constitutional Law in Asia."

Fernando was appointed to the Supreme Court as associate justice by President Ferdinand Marcos in July 1967.

He was chair of the Second Division from Sept. 15, 1974 until his appointment as Chief Justice on July 2, 1979 upon the sudden death of Chief Justice Fred Ruiz Castro.

Fernando retired on July 25, 1985 at the age of 70 and returned to teaching law in different law schools.

A former student said that his effectiveness as a professor "lies in his ability to coerce students into studying."

He was known to loathe tardiness.

Family

Fernando was married to his former student Emma Quisumbing, also a lawyer and daughter of former Justice Secretary Ramon Quisumbing, with whom he had five children: Estela Anna, Enrique Jr. (deceased), Emmanuel, Emma, and Enrco.

His wife, a bar topnotcher in 1948, is herself an authority on constitutional law, having written in 1977 "The Survey of the 1973 Constitution."

Author of 9 books

Said to be an indefatigable writer, Fernando himself had authored at least nine books on constitutional law and human rights including a 900-page treatise on the Philippine Constitution.

Fernando was the son of German Fernando and Honoria Medina. He was born on July 25, 1915 in Malate, Manila.

Consistent scholar

A consistent scholar, he graduated magna cum laude from the UP College of Law in 1938 and placed 13th in the bar exams the same year. He was valedictorian of his class at the Araullo High School.

He was also the first Filipino Sterling Fellow at the Yale Law School in the United States in 1947, obtaining his master of laws degree the following year.

He was a full professor at the UP College of Law from 1941 to 1953. He then became commissioner in the Code Commission from 1954 to 1963.

He served as the George A. Malcolm professor of constitutional law in the UP College of Law and the Jose P. Laurel professor of constitutional law in the Lyceum of the Philippines.

Philanthropic adviser

Many of his students have themselves become prominent as Cabinet members, jurists and businessmen, precisely because of Fernando's advisers said.

He was drafted to the advisory staff of President Ramon Magsaysay and later became adviser on constitutional matters to President Carlos P. Garcia, and presidential counsel to President Marcos.

He was the head of the first commission that investigated the assassination of Ninoy Aquino Jr. But after only two hearings, the five-member Fernando Commission dissolved itself due to domestic and international pressure.

Marcos was forced to convene a panel fact-finding panel led by retired Appellate Court Justice Corazon Juiano Agrava.

Gentleman of the old school

Fernando drew criticisms during the Marcos dictatorship after he was seen in public holding an umbrella for former first lady Imelda Marcos.

But Khan said Fernando did that because he was a "gentleman of the old school."

"That's a very unfair caricature being made of the former chief justice. The guy was a gentleman of the old school," Khan said.

Clear, elegant opinions

Fernando, according to "The Chief Justices of the Supreme Court of the Philippines," by Corazon L. Paras and Ramon Ricardo A. Roque, was one of the few justices who penned the most opinions many of which were dissenting opinions.

"His opinions were clear and elegant and punctuated with footnotes, reflecting his deep researches," the authors wrote adding that "he had a photographic memory and was highly proficient in the English language."

The high tribunal also recalled that Fernando "was humorous by nature, and was a favorite emcee at the socials of the Supreme Court in his time." With a report from PDI Research and Philip Tubera

Northrail families told to leave site by Nov. 15

By Edson C. Tandoc Jr.

A MONTH, then demolition starts.

The government has given the 4,000 families in Malabon City to be displaced by the long delayed Northrail Project up to Nov. 15 to leave or face demolition.

The problem is the government and the affected residents have not yet agreed on a relocation site, Mayor Canuto Oreta told the INQUIRER yesterday.

So far, the residents have rejected two relocation sites: one in Barangay Panghulo and the other in Towerville, Bulacan.

The residents want to be relocated to Valenzuela City, but Mayor Sherwin Garchalian has said the city would not accept them.

Government officials are rushing the long delayed relocation of the affected families after President Macapagal-Arroyo ordered the immediate construction of the Northrail Project.

Laguna de Bay in crisis

By Jerry Esplanada

WATER quality in several portions of Laguna de Bay has worsened. Heavy siltation, meanwhile, has reduced the polluted lake's average depth by at least 55 mm to only 2.5 meters.

These, among other factors, have contributed to the "accelerating degradation" of the country's largest lake, officials of the Laguna Lake Development Authority (LLDA) told the INQUIRER.

According to the latest LLDA status report, water quality has deteriorated in the following sections of the 90,000-hectare lake and some of its tributaries:

- Central West Bay—worsened from Class A to C "with oil and grease concentrations."
- Tanay River—deteriorated to "worse than Class D with very high biochemical oxygen demand or BOD concentration."
- Sta. Rosa—worsened from Class A to D "with high oil and grease concentrations."
- Cabuyao River—worse than Class D "with very high oil and grease concentrations."
- Marikina, Tinasan and San Pedro rivers—worse than Class D "with very high BOD concentration."
- Siniloan, Morong and Sapang Bato rivers—worse than Class D, and • Binan, Bay, Sta. Cruz, Pagsanjan and Pangil rivers—still Class D.

Improved water quality was observed only in these parts: East Bay, Centra. Bay, South Bay and Taguig, Class D to A, and northern West Bay, Class D to B.

Under the DENR's water quality criteria, water usage is classified into Class A (public water supply but still requires treatment to meet standards for drinking), Class B (suitable only for bathing and swimming), Class C (intended for fishery), and Class D (good for agriculture, irrigation, livestock needs and industrial supply).

Lake water quality has been monitored since the early 1970s. From 1990 to 2000, lake waters met the DENR criteria for Class C.

An LLDA report in 2001 claimed Laguna de Bay's water quality had "been improving since 1995." Some agency insiders, however, said otherwise.

Lake in crisis

LLDA general manager Casimiro Ynares III acknowledged that the lake was in crisis, but he said "the battle to save Laguna de Bay continues."

To sustain conservation efforts, LLDA forged in 2001 a partnership with Unilever Philippines and the nongovernment Society for the Conservation of Philippine Wetlands.

Called Clear, short for Conservation of Laguna de Bay's Environment and Resources, Ynares described the tripartite body as a "very interesting model of how government, big business and NGOs can work together."

The concept was a first in the history of the Living Lakes network, which groups Laguna de Bay and 24 other environmentally troubled lakes and wetlands worldwide.

Threats to the lake were taken up during the 9th Living Lakes international conference, held recently in British Columbia, Canada.

International attention

Other Living Lakes members "now have a say in preserving Laguna de Bay, one of the country's most economically important and environmentally significant natural resources," said Chito Macapaga, general manager for corporate development of Unilever Phils.

Manila is hosting next May the 10th edition of Living Lakes.

According to Lenne Santos-Borja, LLDA research and development division chief, siltation was "most prominent in (Laguna de Bay's) West and Central bays."

"During summer, large boats could hardly traverse the area near the mouth of the Pasig River because of sedimentation," Borja pointed out.

From an average depth of three meters in the 1970s to the current average of 2.5 meters.

Borja explained that "the increased sedimentation rate is mainly due to the amount of garbage thrown into the lake and silt coming from the Mangahan Floodway, and increased denudation of the watershed."

'Ridiculous,' NBI says of summary execution claim

By Leila B. Salaverria

OFFICIALS of the National Bureau of Investigation branded as "ridiculous" the claim of a man who said the killing of seven alleged robbers in Laguna was a rubout, adding that he could face a robbery charge for his admission that he was with the group.

NBI-National Capital Region division chief Edmund Arugay said the man, Damian Cea III, would be put in a police lineup so that owners and employees of a pancit factory in Calamba could see if he was part of the group.

"If the owners point to Damian as among the men who robbed them, then we will file charges against him," he said.

But Cea is saying that seven men whom NBI agents shot dead in an alleged shootout in Southwoods, Biñan, were not robbers but

He said that on the day of the shootout, he was with the seven men, five of whom were his friends. They went to the pancit factory to look for a job.

They left the factory in separate vehicles with the seven riding in a yellow Asian utility vehicle. Later, he learned that those seven men were dead.

But the NBI said the seven were members of the Digoy robbery group that allegedly had just robbed the RDL factory owned by Eddie Lee.

Arugay said the NBI had evidence to disprove Cea's claims, including statements from Lee, who not only confirmed the robbery but also identified some of the dead men as members of the Digoy group.

Lee's wife, Rosie, and around 10 workers from the factory had also given statements at

Torre to man Board 1 for RP

GRANDMASTER Eugene Torre was willing to let go, but there were no takers.

So, for the 17th straight time, Torre will again man Board 1 for the Philippine team which left last night to compete in the 36th Chess Olympiad in Majorca, Spain.

Thus developed after GM Rogelio "Joey" Antonio and GM-elect Mark Paragua, currently the country's top-ranked player, declined Torre's offer for either of them to take over the top board.

Thus, Antonio is likely to play Board 2, Paragua Board 3, International Master Jayson Gonzales Board 4, National Master Emmanuel Senador Board 5 and national champion NM Darwin Laylo Board 6 for the Filipinos, who are gunning for a Top 10 finish in the biennial meet.

Rightful anchor

Both Antonio and Paragua, who is already in Europe, said Torre is still the rightful anchor of the RP team, which is being supported by the Philippine Sports Commission, the First Gentleman Foundation and Dickies vice president Dody Arcaya.

"It's OK for me to play Board 1 again. I just want to give others the chance," said the 52-year-old Torre, the country's top board player since the 1972 Yugoslavia Olympiad. Torre's finest moment came in the 1974 Nice, France, edition when he copped the silver medal in Board 1 with nine wins, 10 draws and no defeat.

Better chances

Lorshyl Guizon is set to play Board 1 in the draft side to give veterans WIM Beverly Mendoza and WFM Sheerie Joy Lomibao better chances to produce points. WNM Aces Salvador will be the top reserve.

The RP delegation, led by NCFP secretary general Sammy Estimo as team captain, left aboard Cathay Pacific flight CX902 at 8:10 p.m. and is expected to arrive in Palma, Mallorca at 2 p.m. today (European time). The competition starts on Friday.

The delegation was able to secure visas yesterday with the help of Foreign Affairs Secretary Alberto Romo.

NCFP president Go Teng Kok remains upbeat about the country's chances.

"We have our best players in the fold. I expect our team to be in the thick of the fight," said Go. Marlon Bernardino, contributor

TALK 'N TEXT'S Mark Telan dishes off a pass despite the tight guarding of FedEx's Raniel de Ocampo (33) in their PBA game yesterday.

Phone Pals blast Express for No.3

By Musong R. Castillo

A TALK 'N Text crew that's getting better every game claimed a third victim last night in the same convincing manner that has so far justified its tag as tournament favorite.

The Phone Pals broke out of the gates hard and sustained it throughout, testing the FedEx Express to shreds, 119-98, in the highest scoring elimination round game of the young Gran Matador Philippine Basketball Association Philippine Cup.

Asi Taulava scored 22 points and grabbed 17 rebounds and Mark Telan and Willie Miller chipped in 20 each as the undefeated Phone Pals encountered little trouble in reclaiming the early tournament lead.

The Express crashed back to earth, never getting into the fight after trailing early in the first period and by as many as 16 at the end of the first half.

"Our goal is to get better every game," said coach Joel Banal, adding he does not mind if his team peaks this early in the tournament.

GAME TODAY (Ultron Gym, Bulacan)
6 p.m.—Coca-Cola vs. Alaska

"I'd rather have us start strong than go 0-5 and make up ground (later in the tournament)," Banal said.

"Right now, I think we are at 85-90 percent. We will peak soon enough."

In the second game, Dondon Hontiveros cooled a late Ginebra charge with a triple and San Miguel hammered out an 83-72 victory for its second win since losing to the Phone Pals on opening day.

Joe Lipa again called the shots for the Express, who did not respond the way they did in their upset of Red Bull last week.

Outgunned, outshined and out-bounded, FedEx trailed by as many as 24 late in the game.

Meanwhile, the Coca-Cola Tigers and the Alaska Aces both seek to bounce back from losses when they collide today in another road sortie at the Unos Gym in Butuan.

The Tigers are 1-1 after taking a tumble against the Purefoods TJ Hotdogs on Sunday, while the Aces will be gunning for their first win in the 6 p.m. contest.

RP junior cagebells Another Ramirez cops off today for ABC tilt Driver of Year crown

A SELECTION of standouts from six schools will represent the Philippines in the 17th Asian Basketball Confederation Championship for Junior Women (Under-18) slated Oct. 15-21, in Shenzhen, China.

The team, formed by head coach Estrellita Enriquez with premium on shooting and fastbreak plays, leaves today with former Philippine Olympic Committee chair Christy Ramos as delegation head.

Defending champion China heads the participating teams in Group A that also include Chinese Taipei, South and North Korea, Japan and Thailand. The Philippines is in Group B with Malaysia, India, Macau and Singapore.

Three players each from Assumption College, La Salle and Torres High were picked by Enriquez.

The players: Elna Beatriz Lagarda Santos, Ma. Caterina del Lupa, Angelica Marie C. Jose, Kristine Alon-alon, Hannah Candano, Anna Marita Iida, Fria Bernado, Ma. Arabelle Sibug, Matchie Matsura, Stella Millora and

SUBIC—Louie Ramirez of Petron Ultron-SRA made sure the prestigious Driver of the Year trophy in the SVI-Petron Grand Prix is going back to the Ramirez family after four long years.

Ramirez dominated one of two Blaze super saloon races held over the weekend to clinch his first-ever title at the Subic International Raceway.

The win enabled Ramirez to wrap up the overall championship with still two rounds remaining in the 14-part series organized by Sports Values Inc. (SVI) and sponsored by Petron Corp.

Overall, Ramirez has 82 points based on five wins and four runner-up finishes.

His closest rivals, Kookie Ramirez, and defending champion Jody Coseteng of San Miguel Beer-Caltex are out of it with only 53 and 49 points, respectively. Coseteng did not bother to show up at the races to indicate his surrender.

"I'm very, very happy to finally win," said Ramirez.

Ramirez duplicated the feats of father Pocholo (2000) and brothers George (1997, 1998) and Miguel (1999) as circuit racing champions.

2005 SEA GAMES

Reduced events hurt Viets, Thais

By Marc Anthony Reyes

VIETNAM and Thailand won't be throwing their weight around in the 2005 Southeast Asian Games.

Philippine Olympic Committee and SEAG Federation president Celso Dayrit said the drastic cut in the number of events for the 23rd edition scheduled Nov. 27 to Dec. 5 in Metro Manila and three provincial venues is expected to affect the campaign of the two powerhouse nations in the biennial meet.

For one, Dayrit said shooting in 2005 will only have 21 events, compared with 45 a year ago in Vietnam. The event was dominated by the hosts and Thailand, the Philippines' main rivals for overall supremacy, he added.

Of the 21 gold medals at stake, four will be in practical shooting, which will be making a comeback next year. Practical shooting was last played in the Manila SEAG in 1991, when the country amassed 10 gold medals.

Vietnam also lost a slew of golds with fin swimming, petanque and hand ball failing to make it to the final roster of 41 sports staking a total of 388 golds.

Expected to boost the country's campaign is the inclusion of the indigenous sport of arnis, whose six events the Filipinos are expert to sweep, along with the two golds up for grabs in dancesports.

Wushu, which earned for RP six golds in Vietnam, is also a possible major source of victories with 28 golds at stake.

The other sports where the Filipinos expect to score are billiards and snookers (14 golds), bowling (10), chess (8) and boxing, which will have five women's events.

Track and field, the country's top gold performer the past two SEAGs, predicts to put away at least 15 of the 45 golds at stake.

SO YOUNG, SO GOOD: Rafael "Rapi" Enriquez clears a hump on his way to victory in the 50cc category of the recent Narnesa Carmel Supercross in Bacolod City. Enriquez, who is backed by Philippine Airlines and Diddies, is the heavy favorite to prevail again in the third leg of the series in Iloilo City on Nov. 28. Enriquez is back-to-back Peewee Rider of the Year in 2002 and 2003.

Gosnel, Angeles score; New Balance run kart track draws praise stakes P120,000

TIM Gosnel and Marco Angeles of Primus Racedevils poured it on late in their respective races to foil the favorites last Sunday in the penultimate leg of the 2004 PCSO Shell Superkarting Series at the Boom Na Boom Kart Trak at the CCP Complex.

The duo's fascinating victories underscored the tough competition at the track that drew praises from drivers and racing officials alike.

Gosnel slipped past leader Mike Tuason of Tuason Racing-Addict Mobile in the seventh lap en route to victory in 17:43:307 in the Formula

Rotax Max Expert class.

Veteran Lee Bungarner of M&M Racing pipped Tuason for runner-up honors.

Angeles, on the other hand, seized the lead with three laps left to wrap up the Rotax Max Novice division race in 17:48:123.

The organizing Carmona Circuit Philippines said the drivers are asking for more races at the Kart Trak.

"The high level of competition was evident on the challenging track which drew the best from the drivers," said Carmona Circuit project director Lot M. Tan.

A PRIZE pot of P120,000, including P25,000 for the winners of the centerpiece 25-K event, will be up for grabs in the New Balance Power Race slated Nov. 21 at the Global City in Taguig.

The winners of the men's and women's races of the 25-K run will also receive gift packs and a trophy each, with the runners-up and the third placers getting P15,000 and P10,000, respectively.

Prizes also await the winners of the four men's age-group classes and three brackets for women.

A total purse of P22,000 is at stake for the top three finishers in the separate men's and women's 10-K run while the winner in the 10K Corporate Cup pockets P30,000 worth of gift certificates.

The top three winners in the 5K event also pocket P3,000, 2,000 and P1,000 gift certificates, respectively, plus gift packs and medals.

Lopez agrees to coach Arevalo Cup champ

FORMER Philippine Amateur champion Bong Lopez, now one of the most respected swing coaches in the country, has agreed to handle the training of the winner of the Arevalo Cup 2005. Lopez threw his full backing behind the Daddies' Championship for bag-toters under 25 years which is scheduled in the final week of January next year as his share in the development of golf. "A tournament like this, where the benefits serve the champion in the long term, does not come very often," Lopez said. "We are going to blaze a new trail here and am more than glad to be a part of it." Lopez, also the coach of US LPGA regular Jennifer Rosales, gave his assurance to Tony Arevalo, the former caddy turned businessman who will fund the tournament and the training and development of the champion into a Philippine team material. Last week, Tommy Manotoc became the first to heed the call for support for the event slated Jan. 25-28, when he agreed to put the Arevalo Cup under the auspices of the Philippine Amateur Golf Development Foundation. He also offered the use of the challenging Calatagan Golf Club for free. Under the Arevalo Cup program, the winner of the tournament will be asked to take a leave of absence from his mother golf club and train for one year under Lopez. Arevalo will give modern equipment and a monthly allowance equivalent to a caddy's income for that period. The winner will also be joining local amateur tournaments here and abroad. Aside from producing a prospective RP team mainstay, the Arevalo Cup also hopes to give the winner a decent shot at a better life. The Arevalo Cup holds its offices at the Calatagan Golf Club. Dave Hernandez will answer inquiries at teln. (0917) 8425275, (0917) 8425257.

Age-group taekwondo lures 1,000 jins

AROUND 1,000 fighters are expected to compete in the 2004 Petron National Age-Group Taekwondo Championships on Oct. 16-17 at the Ninoy Aquino Stadium. According to Philippine Taekwondo Association president Robert N. Aventajado, the event provides contestants the chance to demonstrate the skills they have learned as they vie for honors in different categories. Competition will be conducted in four divisions—junior men and women (13-14 years old) and grade school boys and girls (12 and below). Participants will come from all PTA affiliated schools and gymnasiums throughout Metro Manila and the provinces, said PTA organizing committee chair Sung Chon Hong. The tourney, a part of PTA's grassroots program, is being sponsored by Petron, Philippine Sports Commission and Accel.

Interscholastic table tennis this week

MORE than 200 players are expected to compete in the third National Interscholastic Table Tennis Championship and Gerry Cruz Memorial Cup singles event on Oct. 15-17 at the University of the Philippines Kinetic gym. National team members Eduardo Ebu, Richard Gonzales, Ayra Malabayabas, Ariene Borja, Chrisma Capistrano, Bacolod ace Merral Lagunday lead the participants. The event, organized by former Table Tennis Association of the Philippines secretary general Oscar Yohihiro Santelices and Joel Azer River, will have 10 categories for men, women's boys and girls. The team events have drawn entries from 40 schools, including University of Santo Tomas, University of the Philippines, Adamson and De La Salle University. The tournament, sponsored by Accel, TopComa Marketing, Ambulas, Smart and Comdark, will have the individual events, which includes the best of the best event for men and women's singles, scheduled on Oct. 16-17.

Provincial champions' duel resumes

THE DUEL of provincial cockfighting champions resumes at the Araneta Coliseum as the "Luzon Gamecock Breeders Association 7-Stage Derby" finals get under way today. The 4-stage finals featuring 114 fights will start at 11 a.m. Derby sponsors are Asvet Inc., Thunderbird, Robichem Laboratories, Excellence Gamefowls Specialists, Lalpue Drung Inc. and Vitarich Corp. From a field of 82, nine participants hurled the eliminations Tuesday night with three wins each: Romy Dalmacio, Buddy Robrigado, Jun Sevilla, Roy Zaraspe, Edwin Ramos, Francis Lumasad, Boy Marso, Nangela Balibanos and Joseph Chua. Sevilla, a veteran breeder from Malvar, Batangas, leads the LGBA Gamecock Breeder of the Year race with 8.5 points. LGBA president Rene "Boy" Diaz, said a bonus of P100,000 will be given to leg champion. For inquiries, call 926-7808, 924-5072, 924-5051 (loc. 128) or 920-5851940.

Antonio, 2 others share championship

THREE top-rated cockers topped the sixth leg of the Gentlemen Cockers Association of the Philippines 5-Stage Derby Monday night at the air-conditioned Las Pintas Coliseum. Patrick Antonio (Sagupaan Complexor 3000), Ramon Mancaneres and Tony Faustino (EDL Farms) and Eric dela Rosa (La-banan sa Pasay Oct. 15) shared the championship by posting four wins and one loss each. Antonio and Mancaneres/Faustino remained tied for first place in the GCAP Stagfighter of the Year race with 21.5 points each. The derby was presented by Sagupaan Complexor 3000 and Pagcor. The GCAP Stagfighter of the Year will be known on Monday, Oct. 18 during the Grand Championship 5-Stage Derby. The "Stagfighter" winner will receive P300,000 while his handler and gaffer gets P70,000 and P30,000, respectively. For inquiries call 873-1040 and 874-3810.

FIRST, the wards of Ali Atienza, the son no less of Manila Mayor Lito Atienza.

Second, the three members of our country's team to the World Golf Amateurs in Puerto Rico. Let's go to Ali Atienza's case first.

For failing to secure visas to America, Ali Atienza's athletic delegation numbering close to 12 from Manila forfeited its patriotic right to represent the country in a world tournament in America some weeks back.

The sports black eye came on the heels of Angelo dela Cruz's release in Baghdad by his anti-American captors in Iraq. For days, the threat of Dela Cruz getting beheaded by Iraqi extremists gripped the nation.

It is said that when GMA favored one life (Angelo dela Cruz) over the interests of the Coalition of the Willing in Iraq, the Chief Executive incurred the ire of America. US President George W. Bush, as you know, heads the Coalition of the Willing that invaded Iraq last year without any provocation. The Philippines had been part of the Coalition of the Willing.

I learned that Mayor Atienza never bothered to step in to seek a reconsideration when his son's wards failed to get their US visas.

"What for?" said a friend of mine. "The American Embassy people have this mind-set on many things. Once they have decided on something, that's it. Like robots, rarely do they change courses."

And so, Ali Atienza's young wards, some of them with the potential to become world-class athletes, were left in the cold.

It's the same thing with golfers Jun Bernis and Michael Bibat and coach Roger Retuerto, all bound for the Puerto Rico World Amateur Golf Championship set late this month in San Juan.

Twice they presented themselves to the US Embassy, twice they had been denied of visas to America. One can go to Puerto Rico with an American visa—Puerto Rico being a US territory.

The reason for visa denial?

The three could not present enough proof of their strong economic ties to the Philippines. Meaning, they aren't rich.

How could they be rich, for Chrissakes?

Bernis, nearly 30, plays out of Canlubang, subsisting mainly on monthly allowances from his mother club. The only one thing he does best is play golf—for country and Canlubang.

Bibat, 20, like Tiger Woods, has quit school to pursue a career in golf. He is one of the most promising players in the training pool of the National Golf Association of the Philippines. Just very recently, he topped the Singapore Amateur Open.

Retuerto, not yet 50, has been the country's golf coach for years. He had a valid US visa; problem is, he lost his passport a while back.

V-Admiral Lusito Fernandez, the NGAP secretary general, has appealed for a reconsideration, vouching that he'll be responsible for the return of the three to the country after the Puerto Rico event. The non-playing team captain did it via a written appeal the second time the three appeared at the embassy.

Still, no go, said the officer at Window 3.

Someone has volunteered this idea. Why not request Executive Secretary Eduardo Ermita to intervene?

Umm, good idea, since Ermita, a former NGAP president, is presently an incumbent NGAP director.

But I say, no need. Spare the Little President the trivialities, please? The Americans might ask something in return we could not afford. You know how they operate. They give you Vietnam, they take it back some other way. War economy, they call it? Iraq a continuation of their penchant for war economy?

And so, twice we got struck out at the US Embassy.

The first one was a case of ripping it in the bud: Youngsters from Ali Atienza's urf had been deprived of much-needed exposure overseas.

The second was equally tragic: Bernis and Bibat, not to mention coach Retuerto, were part of a team set to defend, if not improve, the country's No. 3 finish in the last World Amateurs in 2002 in Malaysia, considered the Olympics of Golf.

And to think that Americans are supposed to be also addicted to sports, besides war games.

THE GUILDS OF MIDGARD HAVE FOUND A NEW HOME

Batangas cagers bomb Taguig, square NBC series

LIPA CITY—The Batangas 29ers waxed hot in the last quarter to beat Forward Taguig, 91-77, Tuesday at the Lipa Youth Cultural and Convention center here and tie their best-of-three North division semifinal series in the National Basketball Conference at one game apiece.

After struggling in the first three quarters, the 29ers exploded in the last 10 minutes behind Harold Sta. Cruz and Anel de Castro, who scored 16 of Batangas' 26 points.

The two teams figure in a do-or-die game at 6 p.m. today at Forward Taguig's homecourt—the CP Tunga gym.

"It's going to be more intense in Game 3," said coach Yong Garcia. "We hope to sustain the momentum and, hopefully, advance to the North division finals."

Today's winner will face the Spring Cooking Oil-backed Laguna Spring for the tournament's division title.

Andrew Cruz canned what turned out to be Taguig's last basket with 46 seconds left to make it 75-82. After that, the 29ers of Malvar Mayor Tina Reyes, Rep. Oscar Gozos and businessman Bernie Maranan unloaded nine straight points.

The scores.
BATANGAS 91—Sta. Cruz 18, Neo 16, Manucat 15, De Castro 14, Mallari 10, Valera 8, Rodriguez 6, Gonzales 5, Saygo 3, Cuevas 0.

TAGUIG 77—Roldan 17, Robillo 16, De Guila 14, Gamsal 10, Villar 6, Alberto 4, Ricaluan 4, Reyes 3, Cruz 2, Magasin 1.
Quarters: 12-21 43-42, 65-60, 91-77

Celebrities swing it at Southwoods

CELEBRITIES will be back swinging when KB Entertainment Unlimited Inc. stages the 1st Samsung Celebrity International Classic on Oct. 29 at the Legends course of Manila Southwoods Golf and Country Club in Carmona, Cavite.

The strictly by-invitation-only event conceptualized by Kitchie Benedicto-Patano has hired the Sotto brothers (former senator Tito, Vic, Va. and Man.), Joey Marquez, Richard Gomez, Princess Punzalan, Willie Revillame, Dingdong Avanzado, Pops Fernandez and Bobby Garovillo.

Among the field of 120-144 players are TV personalities, top businessmen, sponsors and even ranking pros and amateurs.

Apart from electronics giant Samsung, Smart Communications and Toyota have also agreed to extend corporate support.

Toyota Camry will be at stake as hole-in-one prize on No. 16.

Sta. Lucia Tour 2nd batch gets going tomorrow

DAVAO CITY The second batch of entries in the opening leg of the Sta. Lucia Tour take their shot at the three-d vision honors starting tomorrow at the hazard-laden Rancho Pinos Verdes Golf and Country Club here.

Seven teams representing the banner of Sta. Lucia Realty and fielding a total of 144 golfers will compete in the three handicap divisions under the four-to-play, three-to-count format.

After the completion of Batch A play two weeks ago, Cebu's Atza Vista 1 topped Group I, Luzon's Orchard set the pace in Group II and Davao's Pinos Verdes Team 6 led Group III.

The four other clubs which failed to put any of their teams in the lead—Eagle Ridge, Roynle Tagaytay, Lake Canyara Springs and Summit Point—are expected to bounce back in the Tour which has Globe Platinum as major sponsor.

AL OPENER

Rivera rescues Yankees

NEW YORK—Mariano Rivera showed up just in time to save the New York Yankees against a surging Boston Red Sox.

Shortly after jetting back from a funeral for relatives in Panama, Rivera got Kevin Millar to pop out to strand the tying run at third base in the eighth inning, then finished a thrilling 10-7 win for the Yankees in Tuesday's opener of the American League championship series.

Hideki Matsui tied an ALCS record with five runs batted in, four off Curt Schilling. Mike Mussina was perfect through six innings before Mark Bellhorn doubled on a drive that hit the left-field wall on a hop with one out in the seventh and Bernie Williams drove in three runs, including a two-run double in the eighth that gave Rivera some breathing room.

For much of the night it seemed like a laugher, with the Yankees ahead 6-0 by the third and 8-0 in the sixth.

"It was like it was too good to be true," New York manager Joe Torre said.

But after Bellhorn's hit on Mussina's 86th pitch, the stubbly faced pitcher's huge curveball quickly became hittable.

Millar hit a two-run double with two outs and scored on a single by Troy Nixon. Tanyon Sturtze relieved and Jason Varitek hit a two-run homer on his third pitch, pulling the Red Sox to 8-5.

David Ortiz made it 8-7 with a two-run triple in the eighth off Tom Gordon, who would have been the Yankees' closer had Rivera not been back and ready.

Rivera, no doubt the biggest factor in New York's success since 1996, returned to his native country Sunday after two relatives were electrocuted in the swimming pool of his home.

"My teammates needed me there," Rivera said. "When I went to the bullpen in the fifth inning, I was ready."

HIDEKI Matsui hits a three-run double while Mariano Rivera (inset) returns from a period of grieving to help the New York Yankees close out the Boston Red Sox.

Beckham admission blasted

LONDON—FIFA president Sepp Blatter blasted David Beckham for shaming the game for his decision to seek a yellow card during England's clash with Wales on Saturday.

The Real Madrid midfielder claims he set out to pick up his second booking of the current World Cup qualifying campaign after suffering a rib injury earlier in the Old Trafford match.

"Where are we going when football's ambassadors do not show fair play?" Blatter asked The Sun newspaper.

Realizing he would miss Wednesday's game against Azerbaijan anyway, Beckham was happy to incur a one-match ban by producing a reckless challenge on Ben Thatcher.

"All players should show fair play and should not make sure they are booked, then publicly say, 'I did it deliberately.'"

"This is the captain of the English team and he should have acted in a better way, especially because all the attention is focused on him."

By serving the suspension, Beckham has his slate wiped clean for the rest of the campaign rather than having to play later matches knowing he was just one booking away from a ban. AFP

Phil calls Kobe pampered, cherishes O'Neal

LOS ANGELES—Phil Jackson painted Kobe Bryant as a pampered star who took liberties to an extreme degree, caused dissent in the dressing room and received more concessions than any other player he has ever coached.

"Nobody this year, or in any year I've coached, has received more allowances than Kobe Bryant," the former Los Angeles Lakers coach said in an excerpt of his new book, "The Last Season," which was printed in the Los Angeles Times.

Jackson said he tried unsuccessfully a number of times to trade Bryant and that the deteriorating relationship between superstars Bryant and Shaquille O'Neal was much more than simply a war of words with O'Neal at one point barking: "I'd like to pound the chump."

The Lakers suffered a disappointing playoff defeat to the Detroit Pistons last season and then purged popular coach Jackson and traded former league MVP O'Neal to Miami.

Jackson said he realized before the beginning of the 2003-04 National Basketball Association season that he could no longer coach a defiant Bryant and asked general manager Mitch Kupchak to trade Bryant.

Trade Bryant

But he said that request fell on deaf ears. Jackson also wanted to deal Bryant to Phoenix in 1999 for Jason Kidd and Shawn Marion but was told both times that owner Jerry Buss would never allow it.

"A major confrontation between us seems unavoidable," the Times reported Jackson as saying. "I won't coach this team next year if he is still here. He won't listen to anyone. I've had it with this kid."

The Lakers turbulent season was only aggravated by Bryant's sexual assault trial in Colorado which caused him to miss a number of games, practices and some of training camp.

Jackson said the Lakers footed part of the bill for Bryant's travel back and forth between Los Angeles and Colorado and that an ungrateful Bryant complained his private jet wasn't up to standard.

Bryant, who scored 35 points in the Lakers 87-80 pre-season debut loss to Seattle on Tuesday, still has a civil suit pending against him from his female accuser who decided to drop the criminal charges.

In their last face-to-face meeting following Los Angeles' loss in the NBA Finals, Jackson told Bryant he was going to retire.

"Really?" said Bryant sounding surprised, his eyebrows rising.

Different opinion

Jackson had a completely different opinion of three-time playoff MVP O'Neal.

While they also had their share of differences, Jackson described coaching O'Neal as "an experience I will cherish forever."

He said the two superstars were at each other's throats constantly and the relationship between the two was worse than anyone outside of the Lakers' organization realized.

During their first meeting of the 2003-04 season, Bryant warned Jackson that O'Neal wasn't going to get away with criticizing him in public.

BRYANT: Tired of being Shaq's sidekick

"If he starts saying things in the press I will fire back," Bryant said. "I am not afraid to go up against him. I've had it. I am tired of being a sidekick."

In other preseason matches, Boston defeated Chicago, 104-74. Memphis nipped Orlando, 99-95. And Philadelphia tripped Washington, 114-107. AFP

TEAM Valle Verde celebrates topping the 1st National Interclub Platinum Cup East area eliminations at West Drive Badminton Center.

Platinum Cup south elims set

TWO more national finalists will emerge as the South area eliminations of the Battle of the Courts: National Inter-Club Platinum Cup kicks off on Oct. 16-17 at the Olivarez Sports Complex, Sucat, Parañaque.

Vying for the slot are The Palms Country Club, Alabang Racquet Club, Alabang Country Club, South Central, Powerzone, Leap N Smash, Camp Badminton, Flick, Anvil, Badgers, Speed, Intramuros and Olivarez.

Valle Verde and Player's Best gained the right to represent the East Area when they topped the East eliminations recently at the West Drive Badminton Club.

The country's biggest competition exclusive for badminton courts is co-presented by Globe Platinum and Inquirer Badminton Monthly.

With its 25-court facility, Olivarez is now the country's biggest. The games will be played at its separate 10-court facility with hi-tech 9mm Taraflex mats.

Metro Sports Club in Cebu, Bangayan Holiday Spa in Davao and Pohang in Bacolod will be joining the Metro Manila qualifiers in the national finals on Nov. 20-21 at Market Market at Bonifacio Global City.

Participants will compete in the men's doubles, ladies' doubles and mixed doubles. The top two teams in each group will advance to the crossover semifinals with the winner assured of a final slot.

Major sponsors include Philippine Airlines, Mizuno Badminton and LTime Studio. Nestlé is the official drink provider, Gerflor Taraflex the official mat sponsor and Gosen the official shuttlecock.

All the members of the national champion will win a trip to Bangkok.

Blue Sharks score sweep

THE BLUE Sharks beat the Knights, 81-71 to complete a sweep of the first round of the elimination of the 2004 FIBA Ambassador's Cup last Sunday at the Meralco Coliseum, clinching at least a tie for a semifinals seat in the process.

Coach Gabby Velasco's charges relied on a team effort to negate the two-man show of Knights Mukesh Molinari and rookie Mike Saldanha who combined for 44 points.

The Knights trailed most of the game and managed to tie the game, 53-all, only by the end of the third quarter.

However, the Blue Sharks, reserving their best for the last, opened the final quarter with a 13-4 run behind the combative efforts of Rakesh Chandani, Parmdeep Bhat, Ramesh Marchandani, Bebo Menghramani, and Mike Boman to pull away, 66-57 early in that quarter.

Defending champion Bombay Bombers scored a close 62-57 win over the Kings, who again missed ex-Gincho eager Mike Advani.

In the junior division, the Little Knights posted their second win at the expense of the Royals, 63-44, to earn a guaranteed finals slot.

Jasmine security men 'stricter than PSG'

By Marlon Ramos
PDI Southern Luzon Bureau

TANZA, Cavite—Exaggerated security measures made sure the Ido was unreachable.

Thousands of Caviteños who wanted to get a glimpse of their provincemate, Fil-Am Jasmine Trias of "American Idol," were frustrated by the tight security during a two-hour motorcade that took the 17-year-old to her father's hometown here on Monday.

The fans included a couple who said they would name their forthcoming baby Jasmine.

"They were even stricter than the (Presidential Security Group)," a Cavite newspaper photographer said of the security men.

Eva Reyes, 32, a bank employee, said she and her two daughters had to wake up at 5 a.m. and traveled from Tagaytay City to this town, hoping to get Jasmine's autograph.

But Reyes and her daughters were disappointed when brawny security men prevented people from getting near the singer from Miliario on Oahu island in Hawaii.

"Our efforts were wasted," Reyes said in Filipino. "They were overly strict. They should have at least let some of the fans get close to Jasmine because she was the reason we came here."

But Reyes added that their frustration faded away after she and her daughters heard the Fil-Am girl sing live at the Arayat Sports Complex.

"At least we didn't have to pay for expensive tickets to see and listen to her in person," she said.

Chris Rubio, of Dasmariñas, Cavite, and his seven-month pregnant wife braved the raucous crowd but burly men in black shirts also prevented them from getting near the stage.

Rubio said a local politician, who was among those who sponsored Jasmine's visit to Cavite, had invited them. His wife wanted to have a picture taken with Jasmine, he added.

Rubio said he had been a "solid supporter" of the Fil-Am pop star even during the start of the "American Idol" search.

"My wife even asked her relatives in the US to vote for Jasmine," he told the Inquirer.

Rubio confessed that he and his wife were keen on naming their baby Jasmine.

Even members of the media were not spared from the extra-tight security.

Security personnel kept journalists at bay even as they tried to interview Jasmine. Photographers also complained security men who shoved away some of them when they tried to get near Jasmine.

A photographer for a Cavite newspaper said the security personnel were "overacting."

"They were reacting too much," said Inquirer photojournalist Edwin Bacasmas of the security men.

Journalists were kept from reaching the backstage of the sports complex. A certain Edwin ordered the gate closed as the Inquirer and a television crew from ABS-CBN tried to go backstage and interview Jasmine's father Rodolfo Jr.

"No media people are allowed here," the staff member shouted at the journalists.

A TV reporter said Jasmine's relatives and handlers should understand that she became popular in the country with a lot of help from the media. "It is the elaborate media coverage which made Jasmine famous in the country," the reporter pointed out.

A staffer of the organizing committee said they were being extra careful not to break the specific provisions of Jasmine's contract with her American manager.

prayed that God would help them understand. And so when I broke the news to them, I did not have a hard time."

Claud proved her father's every word right. Asked where her mother could be, the girl did not miss a beat. "She's now in heaven with the Lord."

Jaime was just a little less composed. "I miss her," he said. "I will miss going to Disneyland with her."

Through all of Tuesday's memorials, Charlie's parents, business tycoon Eduardo "Danding" Cojuangco and his wife Gretchen, stayed quietly in the background hardly hiding the fact that they were keeping close watch on the reason.

Anyone could see that Charlie was courageously holding back his tears.

Today, after a funeral Mass, the burial—announced in advance as "private"—will be held at Hacienda Baobani.

Martin: Someday, other singers will record an album of Martin Nievera hits

I HAVE always been an old soul.

That's why when EMI Philippines invited me last Monday to attend the album launch of Martin Nievera's "Unforgettable," I made sure not to miss it.

The concert king's new record contains 14 classic songs such as "Can't Take My Eyes Off You," "Witchcraft," "Misty," "All the Way," "Someone to Watch Over Me" and "Times of Your Life." Listening to Martin sing those timeless tunes chased my Monday blues away. The new album hits record stores on Oct. 18.

"Unforgettable" is produced and arranged by Gerard Salonga. And unforgettable is what the concert king is.

In between songs Martin revealed, "I have always wanted to record these songs but Michael Bublé beat me to it. When I got to meet Michael he said he wanted to have original hits like me and I told him I want to make an album similar to his collection of classic songs. We have a mutual admiration club!"

"This album is my call. I think that singers should be allowed to sing what they want to sing every so often. It's my way of paying tribute to the great singers who have paved the way for me and, hopefully someday, other singers I have paved the way for will come up with an album of Martin Nievera hits."

DOLLY WOOD

Dolly Ann Carvajal

He also admitted that some of the songs are not that familiar to him but he fell in love with them instantly. "It's amazing that Gerard wasn't even born yet when these songs became popular," he noted, "but he's such a music wiz and he was able to arrange and jazz up these classics. He even encoded a chip for anti-piracy. It will be difficult, if not impossible, to pirate my new album!"

Among all the songs included in "Unforgettable," Martin said Sinatra's "Let Me Try Again" is the one that best describes the state of his heart now. Everybody in the jam-packed suite wondered in unison if it was for Pops.

He smiled, "To whom it may concern. I'd rather not discuss my love life until I'm very sure that she's really The One already."

He went on to enthrall the audience with his soulful rendition of "Let Me Try Again."

At this point, Martin need not try too hard. All is well in the concert king's world, colored by unforgettable moments on and off stage.

Ogie lets others shine

I NEVER get tired of WATCHING Ogie Alcasid perform live. He's one entertainer whose sincerity goes right through your heart.

So, even when there was an earthquake the night before, I still went to Music Museum to catch Ogie's "I Am A Singer" concert. And I wasn't a bit surprised to see that there were so many brave Ogie fanatics who defied the elements just to watch him do what he does best.

He sang songs from his new album, "I Am A Singer," as well as MTV hits, classic tunes from the '70s and '80s, and he even did a rap number. He truly displayed his vocal wizardry interspersed with his patented style of humor. There's no song that he can't sing! And he has a knack for delivering naughty one-liners without being offensive. Cal, it's the Ogie Alcasid charm.

Ogie is proud of all the songs in his new album. "I like Wendy Cornejo's 'Magma Ngayon,'" he said. "It's a great wedding song. I'm moved by Vikrona's heart-wrenching 'Tanging Pag-ibig,' and Archie Castillo's 'Mahal Kita' has such a wonderful melody."

The nice thing about Ogie is that he also lets other people shine. Like that night, he plucked two gentlemen from the crowd and made them sing with him on stage. Their trio got thunderous applause.

Ogie is not just a singer by profession. He has made it his lifetime calling to bring out the singers in others by spreading around his love for music with every beat of his heart.

Dynamic rebirth of Visayan films in sight

FOR DECADES now, Filipinos in the South have been yearning for the revival of Visayan films, which were popular in the '60s. The cry has remained unheard, despite surveys that aver that more Filipinos speak Cebuano as their native tongue than those whose first language is Tagalog.

Thanks to Cesar Montano, however, Visayan movies are in for a dynamic rebirth in this December's Metro film fest, where Cesar's Visayan production, "Panagho sa Suba," is one of the official entries.

Can one Visayan production lead to a resurgence of the entire filmmaking industry down south? Well, it depends on how "Panagho" does at the festival, and after.

If Metro Manila-based Visayans make it a point to patronize the movie, and it turns out to be a hit, that will send a strong signal for other producers to bankroll more Visayan movies. If that happens, Cesar can rightfully be hailed as the savior—or, more properly, the regenerator—of an entire movie industry.

Due to his contra mundum determination and tenacity, we liken Cesar and his movie to Mel Gibson and his "Passion of the Christ."

Like Cesar, Gibson's decision to make his movie flew against all "logic" in film circles, and he even had to finance the production with his own money.

Well, Gibson is now $600 million richer—and we hope that Cesar also profits greatly from his own courageous move!

A native of Bohol, Cesar Montano has lived in Manila for decades, but he's never forgotten his roots down south. Happily for his fellow Visayans, Cesar has become a big star in Filipino movies, and he's used this clout to make his "little" Visayan production a big—and possibly even a landmark—film event. With enthusiastic and unified support from Visayan viewers all over the country, that could very well happen.

Incidentally, a related development is taking place even earlier, this November: the "partially Visayan" movie, "Minsan Pa," will start its run before the festival.

Funded by the well-regarded Jeffrey Jeturian in Cebu, the movie starring Jomari Yllana and Ara Mina could also become a rallying point for Visayan viewers who want to remind producers that they have the numbers to rationalize the production of new Visayan movies.

Thus, "Minsan Pa" and "Panagho sa Suba" are shaping up as a one-two punch that could jolt some producers into the belated realization that it's high time for Visayan viewers to once again be given movies that speak of and for them in their own language and with their concerns and aspirations in mind and at heart.

Ryan's 'golden' concert

JUST a final reminder that ace composer Ryan Cayabyab's 50th year retrospective concert will be presented tomorrow and on Saturday night at the CCP's Main Theater.

Say thanks to the prolific and generous Mr. C, and treat yourselves to a great evening of music, the Cayabyab way, why don't you?

Passage at EK

SATURDAY evenings at Enchanted Kingdom turn romantic at 7 p.m. on Oct. 16 and 30, as the Passage band performs favorite selections from Sergio Mendes' latest album, "The Ultimate Hits Three Decades of Music" and the CD "Faun," both featuring great love songs.

Tunes include "Take This Love," "Never Gonna Let You Go," "Put a Little Love Away," "Sweet Baby" and "Take a Look Inside My Heart."

Cuban Dance Spectacular

Lady Salsa, the Cuban Dance Spectacular will perform at the Manila Diamond Hotel this month. The performance has been described by London's The Voice as "a truly exotic high-energy show that will leave you it reeling for more."

'We love you, Ma'am Rio

By Carla P. Gomez
PDI Visayas Bureau

PONTEVEDRA, Negros Occidental—"Palangga ka namon. Ma'am Rio!"

We love you.

Rio Diaz-Cojuangco will be sent to her final rest today in much the same way as she was welcomed home: grieving constituents (she was once vice mayor of this town) are set to line the streets to wave goodbye and express their affection for the last time.

On Tuesday, thousands studied the 27-kilometer highway from Bacolod to Pontevedra, which had blossomed with streamers that bore the same message rendered in different ways.

"Welcome home, Rio," "Thank you for touching our lives." "We will miss you."

A 130-car caravan escorted by 23 motorcycies delivered Ruo's ashes to the St. Michael de Archangel Church, where a Christian service was held, and then a concelebrated Catholic Mass.

Rep. Carlos "Charlie" Cojuangco, had brought the ashes home from Manila on board the family plane, which landed in Bacolod at 1 p.m. With him were his two children Claudia and Ja me. Rio's sisters, and her 21-year-old son Al Alejandro

Rio was 45 at the time of her death in Daly City, California, after a six-year battle with cancer. Negros Occidentales had meant more to her than any other place, said her sister Georgie Diniz Baillet. "This is definitely coming home."

"She would not like to be remembered as a person that became famous for doing good," Charlie said in an interview at the church grounds. And then he added, speaking slowly: "I hope, although she is no longer with us, that because of her example, we will never lose sight of the fact that we should always be thankful to God and offer our work and aspirations to Him. Let's remember her as being happy because she was a child of God, used to glorify Him."

Charles thanked the people of the whole province for the outpouring of love for his wife and the warm welcome accorded her remains.

Al was overwhelmed to see that "so many" had loved his mother. "It means a lot to me and my family—thank you," he said. "I miss her already. But I am happy for her. She always told us that, when it was time for her to go, she was going straight to heaven."

STOCK MARKET

Bargain-hunting lifts stocks

STOCKS rose yesterday, led by top conglomerate Ayala Corp. and third-ranked telecoms group Digtel, as investors snapped up select stocks after the market fell more than 3 percent in three sessions.

Ayala Corp., which has interests in property, telecommunications and banking, rose 1.61 percent or 10 centavos. It had dropped 6 percent in the past four days.

Digital Telecommunications Inc. (Digtel), a unit of conglomerate JG Summit Holdings Inc., rose 13.85 percent or 18 centavos to P1.48 after falling nearly 18 percent in the last three sessions.

JG Summit, which has interests in property development, banking, telecommunications, and airlines, jumped 5.63 percent or 12 centavos to P2.18.

"This is just a technical bounce. I guess most investors are still wary of the higher oil prices and rising interest rates," said First Grade Holdings managing director Astro del Castillo.

"Most investors focused on companies that are expected to have performed well in the third quarter." The main index finished 5.82 points or 0.33 percent higher at 1,790.73 points. The market is up 24.15 percent so far this year.

Value turnover climbed to P1.18 billion from Tuesday's P927.26 million, as gainers equaled losers at 33.

High oil prices tend to undermine investor confidence as they eat into corporate profits. Rising inflation on the back of high crude prices has put upward pressure on key T-bill rates.

At Monday's government auction, the benchmark 91-day T-bill rate—which commercial banks track to set their lending rates—rose to 7.772 percent, the highest since Jan. 20, 2002.

THE PESO yesterday tumbled to its record low of 56.45 against the US dollar on continuing jitters over runaway global oil prices and weaker regional currency markets.

The local currency opened at 56.40, hit an intra-day high of 56.38 before closing at the all-time low of 56.45 to $1, which the market has been retesting at the Philippine Dealing System a few times this year.

The peso lost 8.5 centavos from Tuesday's closing of 56.365 against the greenback. Total volume stood at $166.75 million.

The all-time low of 56.45 was last tested on Sept. 27, likewise due to lingering concerns on skyrocketing oil prices.

At more than $50 per barrel, crude oil price is now at its highest since the Gulf War.

Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas Governor Rafael Buenaventura said the spike in oil prices and weak regional markets pulled down the peso, but the BSP saw no need to intervene.

"The trading is just range-bound," Buenaventura said.

But the BSP chief said remittances from overseas Filipinos—which seasonally pour in during Christmas—would likely strengthen the peso by next month.

He also admitted that there were remaining maturities in its currency risk protection program (CRPP) which the market was servicing, thus adding pressures on the peso.

The CRPP facility is a non-deliverable forward contract (NDF) between the BSP and a commercial bank with the foreign exchange obligations of bank clients as the underlying transaction. The facility was intended to relieve the pressure on the spot market created by market players wanting to frontload their future foreign currency requirements and by borrowers wanting to cover foreign currency obligations.

The opening of the CRPP in December 1997 did much to calm the foreign exchange market in the following years. Its coverage was expanded in October 2000 to include oil imports.

During the settlement of maturing CRPPs, banks would still have to buy from the spot market.

Traders said a lot of those instruments—mostly used to hedge against rising oil prices—matured in recent weeks, adding to the demand for the greenback.

Meanwhile, traders said the dollar rose against major currencies as the market awaited the release of US retail sales data later in the week.

Union Bank of the Philippines chief currency dealer Rovic de Guzman said lack of fresh leads kept the local currency trading flat.

"The peso is expected to remain in its consolidation phase with a mild bias for gradual appreciation in the near term," De Guzman said.

De Guzman said the local unit would likely trade within P56.30 and P56.40 today.

The global research unit of the American Express Bank said the im-

Gov't eyes other measures to raise revenue

AMID the slow progress of the Arroyo administration's proposed revenue-enhancement measures in Congress, the Department of Finance is preparing a package of alternative solutions to the country's fiscal problem, well aware of the adverse consequences of a failure to quickly implement reforms.

Finance Secretary Juanita Amatong said the alternative measures would help the government attain its target of generating P80 billion in additional revenue a year should the main tax measures fail to be legislated by Congress on time.

The finance chief declined to identify the alternative measures. She said, however, that the DOF could embark on programs to sell re-

DOF firm on 3% amnesty tax rate

By Michelle V. Remo

THE DEPARTMENT of Finance said it would not give in to lobbying by some businessmen for the lowering of the amnesty tax rate to a measly one percent.

Finance Secretary Juanita Amato said it would be difficult to accept the business sector's proposal to make the tax amnesty more lenient for tax delinquents because it could put the government at the losing end.

The Federation of Filipino Chinese Chambers of Commerce and Industry, one of the biggest business groups in the country, is pushing for a reduction of the amnesty tax rate from the government-proposed 3 percent to only one percent. Under the government proposal a tax delinquent, instead of being required to pay all his back taxes, will be required to pay 3 percent of his networth.

During a Senate hearing on the tax amnesty bill last Tuesday, the FFFCCI said a 3-percent amnesty tax rate was not enough to encourage tax delinquents to surface and become legitimate taxpayers. The business group said that if the amnesty tax rate would be lowered to 1 percent, the government could easily collect P15 trillion in additional taxes from underground businesses.

FFCCI representative Guillermo de Joya said during the hearing that there were at least 50 billionaires owning P1 billion in assets each, 7,500 businessmen with a networth of P100 million each, 15,000 with networth of P50 million each, and 20,000 with a networth of at least P1 million. The last category refers to those engaged in underground businesses and are therefore tax delinquents.

The business group stressed that the government could benefit more from the one-percent amnesty-tax rate because it could encourage more tax cheats to come out. De Joya said that the P15 trillion in estimated additional revenue from a one-percent amnesty-tax rate would be far better than the P8 billion to P20 billion expected by the DOF from a 3-percent rate, which the group said would not be enticing enough for tax delinquents.

"We do not know where they got the figures. The data still have to be verified," Amato said.

Another Finance official said a one-percent amnesty tax rate would be too low, considering the privileges that a tax delinquent can get from the proposal.

Garments, auto parts exports up

By Ronnel W. Domingo

EXPORTS of garments and textiles rose 9.45 percent in August compared with year-ago level, as shipments consisting of higher value winter items increased, according to the Department of Trade and Industry.

Fibers posted receipts amounting to $229.5 million in August, higher than the year-ago level of $205.7 million.

Trade Secretary Cesar V. Purisima said this showed that the local garments and textile industry was re-aligning in the right direction in view of the dismantling of the world quota system by yearend.

The removal of the quotas are giving jitters to exporters since this could mean either greater access to markets or losing out to Chinese exports.

At the same time, auto parts exports jumped 85.77 percent to $87.2 million from $46.94 million in August 2003.

The growth was attributed to the expansion of the local automotive industry's manufacturing capacity, which Purisima said would continue.

"For instance, Toyota Autoparts Philippines foresees its exports to rise by $379 million in 2004 from $373 million in 2003," he said. "By 2005, export of this category is estimated to reach $400 million."

TAP currently exports locally made transmission assemblies to Japan aside from Taiwan, Vietnam, Thailand, Malaysia, Indonesia, India and South Africa.

Electronics comprised the bulk or 74 percent of total exports in August, a jump from the 65 percent recorded in the same month last year and from 64 percent in July 2004.

Exports of semiconductor devices improved by 14.8 percent to $1.6 billion from $1.39 billion in August 2003.

Non-semiconductor electronic products, which have higher local value-added than semiconductors, posted an 18-percent increase to $655.1 million from $555 million.

These products include devices for telecommunications, communications and radar, automotive electronics, office equipment, electronic data processing, consumer electronics, and medical and industrial instruments.

Bancommerce nets P583.5M

BANK of Commerce (Bancommerce) posted significant gains in the first three quarters of this year as its net income before provisions increased to P583.5 million. Net interest income rose to P1.2 billion from P882 million in the same period last year. The growth was driven by the rise in fund-based revenue especially from loan operations.

Year-on-year, the Cojuangco-led bank's total resources were higher by 12 percent. Deposits continued to expand breaking the P40.4-billion mark in September, up from P34.6 billion a year ago as "the bank gained momentum brought about by the full implementation of its new automated environment and enhanced product offerings," bank President Raul De Mesa said.

Amid a weak loan demand, Bancommerce net loan portfolio increased to P19.9 billion in the first nine months as credit extended to medium sized companies expanded during the year. Sustained lending operations to entrepreneurs and exporters contributed significantly to the growth of its portfolio.

Accelerate into the future of diesel engines with more diesel power at 145 psi Finally, a diesel engine, the innovation that will launch the future.

Introducing the CRDI or Common Rail Direct Injection diesel engine. It delivers twice the power of conventional diesel engines. With power this great, it could even surpass the output of gasoline engines while providing you enhanced acceleration and superior response even at low rpm.

It also gives you enhanced fuel efficiency, cleaner emissions and quieter operations. And because the CRDI uses timing chains instead of belts, it requires less maintenance.

The CRDI - the future of diesel engines. Take-off with its power today in the Hyundai Starex GRX - the grand revolution of elegance in motion.

RP faces another credit ratings downgrade

By Doris C. Dumlao

US-BASED Moody's Investor Service is likely to downgrade the Philippines' sovereign credit rating anew unless fresh revenue-boosting measures are passed by Congress by the time its review team arrives next month.

The country's investor relations officer Cora Guidote, in her first briefing after a recent global roadshow, yesterday said Congress would have to pass one or two new tax measures, at the very least, to avoid another downgrade.

Moody's last downgraded the Philippines' sovereign credit rating to Ba2 in January this year, during which it likewise changed its outlook from "stable" to "negative."

This non-investment grade rating means the issuer has a "substantial" credit risk, particularly as a result of adverse economic change over time, but business or financial alternatives may be available to allow financial commitments to be met.

Guidote noted that the Philippines was one of only four countries downgraded by Moody's this year and one of the eight which was given a negative outlook.

The US credit rating firm monitors a total of 246 sovereign issuers.

She said another downgrade would be contrary to the trend in the Asia-Pacific region, which was showing "extraordinary strength." Other issuers in the region are expecting credit rating upgrades.

"Unfortunately, the Philippines is far from being reviewed for upgrade. The likely scenario is a downgrade, when they come in November," Guidote said.

"The crux of the matter is that we have to pass one or two tax measures. The timing of the passage is crucial because the credit rating agencies will not wait for us," she said.

Guidote said this should be a wake-up call for Congress.

"We don't have to wait for the expenses to come in. Our problem is we don't have a sense of urgency. We really need the reforms," she said.

By next year, she said the government would have to shell out about P34 billion for the servicing of National Power Corp.'s debts once the liabilities of the bleeding company were assumed by the state.

She said tax amnesty, which was the measure perceived to be most appealing to Congress, would not be among those that credit rating agencies would count as revenue-enhancement measures, since the benefits arising from such a move was unpredictable and non-recurring.

She said the lawmakers should rush the passage of the indexation of excise taxes on alcohol and tobacco and the rationalization of fiscal incentives.

Another credit downgrade will make the cost of the government's foreign borrowings higher.

Change in bidding scheme for Transco deal questioned

By Abigail L. Ho

THE CONSORTIUM that gave the highest price offer of $3.4 billion for National Transmission Corp.'s (Transco) concession agreement is opposing the government's decision to hold a public bidding for the contract, instead of a "negotiated bidding."

The group, led by the Electricity Generating Authority of Thailand (Egat) with Thai and Filipino investors as members, cried foul over the lack of transparency in coming out with that decision.

Consortium spokesperson Asiselo Gonzaga said all four bidders were supposed to send via e-mail by Wednesday (Oct. 13) some clarifications on the bids they submitted to the Power Sector Assets and Liabilities Management Corp. (PSALM) for the Transco concession.

However, instead of waiting for these clarifications, Energy Secretary and PSALM vice chair Vincent Perez announced Tuesday that the state firm had already decided to scrap the negotiated bidding scheme for the Transco concession and revert to the traditional public auction procedure.

This announcement effectively terminated all ongoing discussions between PSALM and the four bidding consortia.

Perez said the bids submitted by the potential investors to PSALM were "highly unique and complex," making it difficult for PSALM to determine which among these bids would give the government the best deal.

But Gonzaga said this reason was "unacceptable" as the offers contained in the four term sheets, while very complex, were not beyond analysis.

"And we do not believe those conducting the technical evaluations are incompetent," he added.

He further said that PSALM last Friday informed the bidders that they had to make some clarifications on their bids, for which they were given up to the afternoon of Oct. 11 to respond.

The Monday deadline was then extended to Oct. 13. However, Perez announced Oct. 12 that the government would no longer pursue a negotiated bidding process for the 25-year concession contract.

"There was no transparency in the whole exercise," he said.

He warned the government of the possible repercussions of this rules reversal, saying this might just turn the country into a "laughingstock in the international community."

The Egat-led group as well as the three other bidders for the Transco concession all exerted a substantial amount of time and resources to come up with the offers that were good enough not only for their respective businesses but also for the government, Gonzaga said.

VAT exemption lifting seen to raise P10B in revenue

By Michelle V. Remo

THE GOVERNMENT is expected to collect P9-P10 billion in additional revenue yearly from the lifting of the value-added tax exemption of certain products and services, according to the Department of Finance.

Finance Secretary Juanita Amatoang said the removal of the VAT exemptions formed part of the government's efforts to rationalize the country's fiscal incentives.

The DOF earlier submitted to Congress a draft bill seeking the reduction of the number of products and services covered by the VAT exemption, such as services rendered by doctors and lawyers.

The bill also seeks to lift the VAT exemption of the following: sale or importation of coal, natural gas, and petroleum products; sale or importation of raw materials for petroleum products; importation of passenger and/or cargo vessels of more than 5,000 tons; sale and importation of cooperatives; and sale and importation of printing and publication books.

The DOF said the "too many" VAT exemptions was the reason the VAT system was not effective.

Finance Undersecretary Grace Tan earlier said the exemptions distort the VAT system, which was supposed to have a broad base of taxpayers to properly implement the tax trail mechanism where taxpayers were required to declare their input and output VAT credits.

DOF estimates showed that the government lost about P144 billion from VAT leakages in 2003, alone. The government collected only P135 billion in VAT payments last year, much lower than the expected collection of P279 billion.

Aside from reducing the number of VAT exemptions, the government is also pushing for two other bills that seek to rationalize the fiscal incentives enjoyed by businesses in the country. One bill is focused on removing the tax and duty exemptions granted by several special laws. The other bill is aimed at rationalizing the incentives granted to businesses registered with the Board of Investments and the Philippine Economic Zone Authority.

Amatoang said the government stood to realize additional collection of P8-P12 billion every year from the reduction of tax and duty-free privileges.

The move to rationalize the incentives granted by the BOI and Peza, however, will be revenue neutral. She explained that the bill on the BOI and Peza incentives was aimed at rationalizing the perks not by limiting the coverage of the exemption but by reducing the number of years that businesses can enjoy the perk.

She said that under the proposed bill, a Peza-registered company could only enjoy the tax exemption for a maximum of 20 years. While the 20-year incentive could still be too long, she explained, it was deemed better than the current system that granted firms virtually a lifetime of tax exemptions.

Intel Q3 profit up

SAN JOSE, California—Intel Corp.'s third-quarter profits jumped 15 percent and sales edged higher even though the semiconductor giant struggled with weak demand for desktop computer microprocessors, excess inventory and growing competition.

The results were driven largely by record sales of processors for servers and mobile computers as well as a bigger slice of the flash memory market, the Santa Clara-based company said Tuesday.

It expects weak conditions to persist through the end of the year, with overall sales in the current quarter to be in the range of $8.6 billion and $9.2 billion.

"We've forecasted revenues a bit below what you'd normally expect for the fourth quarter," said Andy Bryant, the company's chief financial officer. "It's not a dramatic change from normal, but just a little light."

For the three months ended Sept. 25, Intel earned $1.9 billion, or 30 cents per share, on sales of $8.5 billion.

In the same period last year, the company earned $1.7 billion, or 25 cents per share, on sales of $7.8 billion.

The latest results include a tax-related gain that boosted per-share profits by 3.6 cents.

Analysts were expecting Intel to post a profit of 27 cents per share on sales of $8.4 billion, according to a survey by Thomson First Call.

Last month, the Santa Clara-based company lowered its revenue forecast, citing lackluster demand.

At the time, it estimated sales would range from $8.3 billion to $8.6 billion, down from the original estimate of up to $9.2 billion.

Intel also warned that its gross margins are sagging, and it continues to suffer from excess inventory.

"Growth was not as high as we originally anticipated due to inventory adjustments at some of our major customers and lower than expected overall demand for PCs," CEO Craig Barrett said.

Bryant said the biggest weakness is in consumer computer sales, particularly at US retailers. He said higher fuel prices may be playing a role, as people have less money to spend on new computers.

To help absorb inventory, which started building up in the second quarter, the company is slowing production at its factories around the world. AP

Nordic, Asian countries named most competitive economies

STOCKHOLM, Sweden—Northern Europe and key Asian countries retained the most competitive economies worldwide, cementing their ranks among the top 10 in an annual survey conducted by the World Economic Forum.

In the annual poll of 104 countries' competitiveness by the World Economic Forum, Finland held the top spot for the third time in the last four years, followed by the United States.

Rounding out the top 10 in "The Global Competitiveness Report 2004-2005," issued Wednesday by the Geneva, Switzerland-based WEF, were Sweden, Taiwan, Denmark, Norway, Singapore, Switzerland, Japan and Iceland.

The bottom of the list was rounded out by countries in South and Central America, Asia and Africa, including Nicaragua, Madagascar, Honduras, Bolivia, Zimbabwe, Paraguay, Ethiopia, Bangladesh, Angola and Chad, which was last.

The Nordics fared well because of their long-cemented ideals of curbing corruption, respect for contracts, rule of law and dedication to one-on-one business relationships.

In Sweden, for example, it's custom that a handshake on a business deal, be it the sale of fighter jets or providing stereo components, is just as binding as pages of contracts.

"The Nordic countries are characterized by excellent macroeconomic management overall—they are all running budget surpluses—they have extremely low levels of corruption, with their firms operating in a legal environment in which there is widespread respect for contracts and the rule of law, and their private sectors are on the forefront of technological innovation," said Augusto Lopez-Claros,

A FILLING station forecourt near Reading, England, showing the price of gasoline. Record oil prices on both sides of the Atlantic fueled growing concern that the wider economy may suffer. AP chief economist and director of the WEF's global competitiveness program.

Japan, which was No. 9, rose from 21 in 2001, boosted in part by the island nation's economic recovery. China, however, fell from No. 44 to 46, despite its roaring economic success of late.

The decline was noted because of the country's extensive administrative control, red tape and poor accounting standards.

Taiwan (4) and Singapore (7) are the highest Asian countries, because of the former's strong grasp of technology production and research and the latter's solid economic environment.

Finland, home of mobile phone giant Nokia Corp., retained the top spot because of its quickness in adapting to new technology, proactive business practices and "nurturing a culture of innovation," the WEF report found. AP

Japan's reform policy on track, analysts say

TOKYO—Whoever wins the US presidential election, Japan will stay on its reform path as cooperation between the world's two largest economies has grown increasingly close, analysts said.

Japan can be expected to maintain its policy of curbing public spending and debt while easing regulations to support growth and trade.

Gone are the bitter bilateral trade frictions up to the 1990s over Japanese car exports and protected farm markets and Washington's calls on Tokyo to spend billions of dollars on building dams and bridges to spur domestic demand.

The Japan-US relationship has matured into seeking ways of benefiting each other by opening focused sectors, such as Japan's telecommunications and pharmaceutical markets, to foreign investment.

Chinese exports to the US market have now outpaced those from Japan, also cooling off US-Japan trade rows.

As the major market democracies have shifted to sustained non-inflationary growth, the main task for Japan and the United States is to balance the budgets and pay down the debt.

Economists say they expect continuity in US policies which would provide some stability to the world's economies and markets after the Nov. 2 election between Republican incumbent George W. Bush and Democrat challenger John Kerry.

"Whoever wins the presidential election, the US fiscal policy will not change for now, with a Kerry administration budget policy not being released until next October," said Susumu Takahashi, chief economist at Japan Research Institute.

"As for its monetary policy, Fed chairman (Alan) Greenspan is believed to be dictating it regardless of who becomes the next president," Takahashi said.

"Therefore, I don't expect any major backlash on Japan for now," he said.

Under Bush or Kerry, the US policy on the currency market is likely to stay on course as the US economy, like others, is forecast to slow down next year, analysts said.

Washington will probably continue publicly endorsing a strong dollar for fear of a sell-off in US securities while urging its trade partners— notably China and Japan—not to guide their currencies lower against the US unit to make their exports cheaper, they said. AFP

Federal authorities call for crackdown on intellectual property infringement

LOS ANGELES—A federal task force has recommended expanded investigative and prosecutorial powers to combat intellectual property theft ranging from counterfeit drugs to swapping songs over the Internet.

Wiretaps should be allowed to investigate intellectual property theft that threatens health and safety and more investigators should be added in key US cities and in piracy hot spots in Asia and Eastern Europe, the report released Tuesday said.

"With the recommendations put forward by the task force, the department is prepared to build the strongest, most aggressive legal assault against intellectual property crime in our nation's history," US Attorney General John Ashcroft said.

The report also endorsed the rights of companies to compel Internet service providers to turn over the names of people who have traded songs, movies, software or other copyright-protected items over the Internet.

That power is included in the 1998 Digital Millennium Copyright Act, but has been challenged by companies, such as Verizon Communications Inc., which want to protect the identity of their subscribers.

The US Supreme Court on Tuesday declined to hear an appeal of a lower court ruling in favor of Verizon.

Other similar cases have been or are expected to be brought to the high court.

Ashcroft declined to comment on the Supreme Court's action, saying that his department might have to be involved in future, similar cases.

But he defended the task force's recommendations.

"We believe people in the private sector have a responsibility to address these threats in the civil dimension as the law allows them and we have a responsibility to address these matters criminally," Ashcroft told The Associated Press in an interview.

While much of the attention on intellectual property has been focused on protecting songs, movies and computer software, the Intellectual Property Task Force report cited counterfeit drugs, brake pads, cell phone batteries, baby formula and other items that can cost lives as well as cost their makers millions in profits. Asian stocks down on oil concerns

SINGAPORE—Weaker oil and metals prices hurt shares in Asian resource companies on Wednesday, offsetting gains in some technology issues following upbeat earnings reports from bellwethers Intel Corp. and Yahoo Inc.

European and US shares looked set to open higher, however, cheered by gains in Intel and Yahoo in after-hours trade.

The yen inched higher, while gold slipped to around $413 an ounce.

Tokyo's Nikkei stock average closed flat at 11,195.99, erasing early gains as investors' wariness towards the technology sector resurfaced, despite good news from Intel.

"There's a feeling in the market that the worst thing that could have happened (at Intel)—poor earnings together with no hope in sight of moving its bloated inventories—has been avoided," said Norihiro Fujita at M. Subishi Securities.

"But the earnings do not appear to suggest a reversal of the market's trend towards selling high-tech stocks."

An MSCI index of shares elsewhere in the Asia-Pacific had fallen 0.4 percent by 0615 GMT, weighed down by more than 1 percent falls in its energy and materials sectors.

Chinese oil giant Sinopec Corp. and CNOOC Ltd. dropped 3.9 and 2.8 percent in Hong Kong. Japanese refiner Nippon Oil Corp. fell 1.3 percent.

Internet media company Yahoo Inc. was another bright spot among US earnings, reporting a quarterly net profit that more than tripled, sending its shares up 2.2 percent after hours.

Nasdaq 100 index futures were 0.6 percent higher.

Australia's benchmark index edged up 0.2 percent, but shares fell between 0.2 and 1 percent in Hong Kong, Taiwan, South Korea and Singapore.

Memory-chip and flat-screen maker Samsung Electronics Corp. climbed 0.7 percent in South Korea after falling over 4 percent on Tuesday. The company is due to report quarterly earnings on Friday.

Chartered Semiconductor Manufacturing Corp. rose 2 percent in Singapore.

Among losers, steel maker POSCO Co. Ltd. fell 2.7 percent, despite posting strong earnings on Tuesday, as investors booked profits from a recent run-up in the stock. Reuters

Oil retreats from record highs; supply concerns linger

SINGAPORE—Oil prices backed away from record highs on Wednesday as signs that $50-plus crude is crimping demand growth prompted traders to lock in profits from the market's 23 percent surge since mid-August.

But dealers warned that the production disruptions and thin cushion of spare capacity fueling this year's rally remain in place, giving the market little scope for a major correction.

US light, sweet crude was trading down 24 cents at $52.27 a barrel, extending losses after the market tumbled from Tuesday's all-time high $54.45 to end $1.13 lower on the day.

Oil has been ripe for a correction after an almost unbroken $10 climb over the past four weeks, but dealers cautioned that the move might only be a pause in the sharp march higher.

"People were looking for $55 yesterday and when we failed to reach that level, the market went into profit-taking," said Tetsu Emori, chief commodities strategist at Mitsui Bussan Futures in Tokyo. "But market sentiment is still very strong."

We need to see a small correction before going up to $55 or $60."

Short-term supply troubles haunt the market, with more than a quarter of US Gulf of Mexico production still crippled by Hurricane Ivan and Nigerian unions threatening to extend a general strike over fuel prices.

A forecast decline in weekly US distillate supplies would also highlight the potential shortfall in heating fuel stocks ahead of the northern hemisphere winter, when demand for the oil spikes in the US Northeast consuming region.

Stockpiles were 6 percent below 2003 levels last week and had been slow to build due in part to last month's hurricane.

The Northeast may get a slight reprieve, however, as the region is not expected to experience significant cold for at least another two weeks, US forecasters said on Tuesday.

Distillate stocks are expected to fall 1.1 million barrels to the week to Oct. 8 in government data due out Thursday afternoon, a Reuters poll of 10 analysts showed.

Crude stocks, also in deficit versus last year, are seen rising 1.7 million barrels.

Winter fuel is in short supply around the globe, with European distillate stocks 3.4 percent below last year and kerosene supplies in Japan down 20 percent from 2003.

As prices remain resolutely above the $50 mark, dealers are taking heed of the increasing threat that high energy costs pose for the global economy in the period ahead.

Oil demand will expand at a blistering 2.71 million barrels per day (bpd) this year, the fastest in 24 years, but will slow to 1.45 million bpd in 2005, weaker than first forecast due to high prices, the International Energy Agency said on Tuesday.

The agency also warned that China, the engine behind this year's explosive growth in fuel usage, has begun promoting fuel-saving measures and seeking alternatives to oil.

Traders continue to fret over the 470,000 bpd of US Gulf production that is still shut in, a month after Ivan hit the area, with only about a third of that total expected to be recovered by month's end.

The market was also supported by disruptions in Nigeria, where saboteurs set fire to a major pipeline operated by Royal Dutch/Shell, who said that the outage would only affect 20,000 bpd after other supplies were rerouted.

This week's general strike over fuel prices in the OPEC member has not hindered its 2.3 million bpd of production, but unions said on Tuesday they might extend the strike past Friday, raising the risk to exports. Reuters

Guardians of the environment

THE RICOH Group, manufacturers and distributors of imaging solutions and office equipment, has long since embraced their role as guardians of the environment. Established in 1936 and currently the industry leader with 371 subsidiaries and 24 affiliates world-wide, Ricoh is most certainly aware of their social responsibility.

"The Spirit of Three Loves", the Ricoh Group's corporate philosophy, inspires their direction to achieve better sustainable management. Established by Ricoh founder, Kiyoshi Ichimura, the philosophy theorizes that "everyone at least loves himself/herself. As time passes, however, this feeling of love grows and expands to include all people, plants and animals in the world." From these thoughts was born the Ricoh Group's management philosophy, which seeks "to establish and nurture the corporate culture and system so that survival in a time filled with increasing change, information-oriented societies, diverse values, and more intense competition could be ensured." In its 2003 Sustainability Report for the Environment, the Ricoh Group "recognizes environmental conservation as one of the most important missions given to mankind... regarding this effort as an integral element in all our business activities."

Critics might venture that while this is a noble cause, it may be easier said than done. Yet the Ricoh Group has managed to achieve their goals through a company-wide approach. Not only do they comply with environmental regulations, they take it upon themselves to achieve corporate targets in ways and means that do not further stress the environment. For example, Ricoh has developed quick start-up (QSU) technology, enabling their machines to save energy and recover quickly from energy-saving mode, and thus lessening the emissions released to the atmosphere.

Ricoh factories and facilities are designed and operated in consideration of preventing pollution, effective utilization of energy and resources, as well as responsible disposal of waste products. Care is taken to ensure minimal environmental impact and maximum safety throughout every step of production. And in every country or region where Ricoh conducts business, they maintain close ties with the community, while operating on an atmosphere of transparency concerning their activities and conservation efforts.

In the Philippines, the Ricoh Group is represented by Ricoh Philippines Inc. For more information on their environmental conservation projects, call (632) 729-5161 or e-mail www.ricoh.com.ph, sales inquiries email sales@rph.ricoh.com.ph.

FIVE BAYER YOUNG ENVIRONMENTAL ENVOYS FOR 2004 AWARDED TRIP TO GERMANY

Five of the 13 Bayer Young Environmental Envoys (BYEE) for 2004 were awarded a weeklong all-expense paid trip to Germany during formal ceremonies held at the Edsa Shangri-La Hotel in Mandaluyong City on Sept. 23. The five envoys representing Luzon, Visayas, and Mindanao were chosen based on their Action Plans on environmental protection and preservation, which they presented before a distinguished panel of judges from the media, government, the United Nations, and youth and non-governmental organizations. The five envoys will be joining their student

IEEE holds Visayas confab

THE INSTITUTE of Integrated Electrical Engineers of the Philippines Inc. (IEEE), Region 7, through its regional governor, will hold its 6th Visayas Regional Conference on Oct. 14 and 15 at the Waterfront Hotel and Casino in Lahug, Cebu City. The conference this year is hosted by the North Cebu Chapter and co-hosted with the other chapters in Region 7. The conference will focus on its role of uplifting the technical competence of electrical practitioners, with the theme "Harnessing the Innovative and Competitive Skills of the Electrical Practitioners." The organizers have lined up various topics for the conference. Experts from different technologies who are abreast with the latest trends in electrical engineering practices and technology will deliver their dissertation papers. Conference attendees will be given copies of the technical papers in CD form together with the convention kit and souvenir program. For inquiries, call the office of the regional governor at (032) 345-4531 or (032) 343-6939.

Artist Dee at The Crucible

THE CRUCIBLE Gallery showcases artist Simeon Dee in a show that opened on Oct. 13. Featured will be a collection of Dee's 36 watercolor drawings. Dee is a member of the prestigious Dinmasaling Group of Artists founded in 1968 by his longtime friend and mentor well-known artist Sofronio Y. Mendoza, better known as SYM. In 1955, Simeon graduated with a Bachelor of Science Degree in Architecture at the University of Santo Tomas and received private lessons from SYM while in Vancouver. The subject matter of his art pieces reflects on Simeon's love of nature. He is partial to a combination of color of trees, flowers and foliage, which he claims to have inherited from his father and grandfather. He derives great pleasure and relaxation from painting at his home studio during his retirement years. Dee has been living in Vancouver, BC with wife Marietta since 1973. The exhibit will run until Oct. 26. The Crucible Gallery is located at the 4th floor of Building A, SM Megamall, Mandaluyong City. For information, call telefax 635-6061.

Linger over your coffee at breakfast. You're closer now than you've ever been to your office in Makati. Or even Ortigas. At the Global City, you are at a true world-class enclave: superbly connected to major road arteries and to the metro's most important destinations. The EDSA-Kalayaan Flyover is your fast lane to the Makati Central Business District. And through the C-5 Road, you are mere minutes from Ortigas Center, as well as the NAIA. So with everything this close to home, life is yours to live at your pace.

Pamper yourself in a resort right at home

Experience the luxury of a Caribbean-style paradise everyday. Laze on the in-water lounge at the infinity pool. Before you, the panorama of the lush Manila Golf Course is captivating. Fall under its spell and relax.

Soak up some sun at the paved sunbathing lounge. Or pump iron at the well-stocked gym. Afterwards, treat your sore muscles at the sauna. For your young ones, the playground and the kiddie pool promise hours of fun. At the view deck, daydream among shady trees and fragrant flowers.

In this vibrant resort-like setting, you'll find that the mood is always right for unwinding.

Step outside and let the good times begin

The path to the city's hottest spots in town begins just beyond your door. In fact, you're just a stride away from the Forbes Town Road down the block. Here, hop your way through the lively row of cafes and restaurants. Then join the fun as it buzzes to colorful life every night with alfresco feasts and parties. Want to be fashionably in? The chic boutiques at this strip are just waiting for you to drop by. It's a world of pleasure right here, all yours to enjoy as you please.

Your own spot at a world-class city on the rise

Intelligently master-planned, the Global City's prestigious developments showcase the best of 21st century urban living. From bargains at the S&R PriceSmart Club to one-stop shopping at the MC Home Depot. From family recreation centers like the Sports Kamp to happening spots such as The Port and NBC Tent. From a fast-rising business district at the 57-hectare Big Delta to institutions such as the Philippine Stock Exchange.

In this city of green, wind-swept open spaces are perfect for kite flying and picnics. Meanwhile, there are parks for families to stroll and view public art pieces.

Premier scholastic environment for the crème de la crème

Put your children in the best academic training ground in Metro Manila. At The Bellagio, you're next door to three excellent schools: the International School Manila, the British School Manila and the Manila Japanese School. Just a short drive away are other respected centers of learning such as Assumption College, Colegio de Sta. Rosa, Colegio de San Agustin, Don Bosco Technical Institute, Asian Institute of Management and University of Asia and the Pacific.

A lifestyle far beyond the usual, celebrated everyday in the finest modern setting. This is life as it is meant to be. Live it here, at The Bellagio.

THE RETURN OF THE MAN WHO ATE EVERYTHING
JEFFREY STEINGARTEN

'It Must've Been Something I Ate'
—Jeffrey Steingarten, Knopf, 2002

Vogue's food critic writes short and informative essays on tuna belly, the differences between sea salts from all over the world, the slaughter of a pig in the south of France, espresso, duck liver, serious beef and much more. In short, things you always wanted to know about certain foods but didn't know whom to ask.

COOKBOOK

'The Babbo Cookbook' —Mario
Batali, Clarkson Potter, 2002

Mario Batali is the king of weird meats, and is thus my hero. Pork and beef cheeks, ox tail and ox tongue all share a special place in his menu alongside the usual duck liver, veal chop and osso bucco. His dishes are all original and quite well thought-out combinations. What you see in the book are literally what you see at his restaurant, Babbo.

SQUARE scooper

ORKA Pro silicone glove

The top tools of the trade

Square scooper

This is my latest kitchen tool. I got it at a restaurant supply store in Singapore last month. Just don't use white-looking ice creams with it, because people tend to think you're scooping out butter! I also heard that they make a pyramid shape, too, gotta get that also!

Microplane zester

This is a crossover kitchen tool. It used to be found only in hardware stores for sanding down wood, but is now found in professional kitchens everywhere! Think of it as a very fine and very sharp cheese grater, guaranteed to get just the zest and leave the bitter white pith of any citrus.

Orka silicone gloves/oven mitt

Do away with wet and nasty kitchen towels, and get yourself a glove that can withstand up to 550°F of boiling oil! No kidding! Pick up a potato in boiling water with ease and confidence. Especially useful for bakers!

Balinese mortar and pestle

This was a gift from my good pal and seafood goddess, Chingling Tanco, from Bali. It's great for making spice pastes and pestos. The surface is a bit rough and promotes a grinding—instead of a pounding—action. Get one!

Pizzelle maker

Want to make your own ice cream cones? People did in the old days. They filled the inside of one of these contraptions with batter and placed it over a fire. When the batter set—but before it became crispy—it was draped over a cone-shaped mold or cup. After a few minutes, the batter became crisp and they had their homemade ice cream cones.

'What Einstein Told His Cook'—Robert L. Wolke, Norton, 2002

A professor of chemistry explains food science in a practical way: Why cooked foods turn brown? Why salt the water for boiling pasta? Is your balsamic vinegar real? What's umami? Why is red meat red? How do nonstick pans work? A quick read will help you understand and appreciate your cooking a little more. Now you'll know what the pros know!

'The French Laundry Cookbook'—Thomas Keller, Artisan, 1999

'The French Laundry' would easily score three stars on the Michelin Guide if they did rate restaurants in the US. Meaning: Everything is and should be perfect from the reception, the linens, flatware, glassware, service, and of course, the food. At this level, you should not be able to complain about anything. Chefs' special anniversary recipes

FLAVORS Magazine celebrates its fourth year with a special anniversary issue featuring recipes specially prepared for the occasion by the chef-friends.

Chef Junjun de Guzman of the Center for Asian Culinary Studies offers party pica-pica: Oven-roasted Potatoes with Smoked Chorizo Topping, Pita Triangles with Fried Garlic, Tomato and Burnt Parmesan, BBQ Mini Short Ribs, Sun-dried Tomatoes on Nachos, Eggplant Rollups with Spicy Sausage, Shrimp Wansuy Toasties, Roasted Chicken Drumettes, Panum Fingers with Tuna and Celery Filling and Vegetarian Tartlettes.

Chef Joey Carbon of The Heritage Hotel Manila has come up with bite-sized desserts, gourmet style: Baklava, Crème Brûlée, Chocolate Medallions, Cheese Crêpes, Panna Cotta with Dulce de Leche, Hazelnut Sandwich, Butter Rum Pecan Slice and Raspberry Plan Tarte.

Resident chef Eugene Raymundo's contribution is the Ultimate Apple Pie, a combination of three classic ways of making apple pie—French, American and the more elegant Tarte Tatin.

Featured chef is Patricia Mendoza-Mesina of Kaniyaya, Cascada and Timpla restaurants. She shares recipes for Tilapia Fingers, Camaron and Mango Salad, Kesong Puti and Garlic Longganiza Pizza and Fresh Lumpia Ubod with Crabstick.

Also featured are new menu offerings of Temple Bar, Ilonggo dishes in Flavors of Bacolod, nata de coco dishes and Pixie Sevilla Santos' FAQ on olive oil.

The anniversary issue also carries a story on Hotel Pontefino and a step-by-step lesson on how to make homemade cognac.

ADVERTISING is a P60 billion-a-year business, and 40-50 percent of that is spent for radio-television commercials. No wonder, everywhere we turn, we're bombarded with ads, not only on radio-TV but also in newspapers and magazines.

Take note, for example, of the recent boom in outdoor billboards, posters and streamers. Even the pages of school notebooks and writing pads are not spared.

THE CONSUMER

Marietta Velasco Giron

Now even ad people are concerned about the advertising glut on TV, or what they call "television advertising clutter." At the Adboard forum we attended last week, we found out that the ad industry has a covenant that supposedly limits the airing of TV commercials to a maximum of 18 minutes per program hour. The problem, however, is that this self-imposed regulation does not cover plugs and announcements, and other unpaid spots.

Why limit the ads on television? Rau Alvarez, president of the Philippine Association of National Advertisers (Pana), cites the following findings of a previous study on consumer attitude to TV clutter: It is an intrusion on viewing, viewers tend to switch channels or leave the room while the ads are airing, it lowers OTS (opportunity-to-see) for ad messages, and it may create a negative attitude toward the ads.

The Adboard is undertaking a new study on TV clutter and how it affects advertising recall. Results will be released in November. In the meantime, Alvarez is asking Pana members and associates to abide by the 18-minute maximum commercial load until the results of the study are released.

Truth in advertising

TV clutter is but a minor concern if we also think about ads that are false, deceptive and misleading. Unfortunately, the Adboard forum last week failed to satisfactorily answer some of the questions asked by members of the media, for example the claims of some products that papaya can whiten dark skin.

Some of the concerns we should have raised, but unfortunately didn't think of at the right time, included the following: deceptive ads featuring products and fast-food servings (the actual product is a poor copy of what is in the advertisement), false claims about health and cosmetic products, misleading hypotheses, structural stability of billboards, controversial ads on the Metro Rail Transit trains, code of ethics of the advertising industry, and more.

Nevertheless, being part of the forum was a time well spent with people that shape consumer tastes and values. Praises are in order for the initiative of the Advertising Board to hold the series of media meetings to discuss concerns and share information.

We personally thank Pana president R. Alvarez, Adboard corporate secretary Mateo Villanueva, and Jun T. Perez of the outdoor advertising sector.

We urge consumers to send their complaints and comments about advertising to the Adboard. For information, call 8104873 and 8134398 or send e-mail to Adboard executive director Oscar Villanueva at adboard@info.com.ph

Fastfood complaints

We received the following e-mail from Carmela T., a concerned mother who travels frequently to the north with her family: "Please call the attention of the owners of these two fastfood chains. One is a burger stop in SM Pampanga, where flies were all over the place on the two occasions I brought my kids there. If the owners cannot afford insecticides, they can at least provide the waiters fly-swatters."

"The other one is KFC at the Nepo Mall in Angeles City and KFC at Robinson's Angeles which seemed to have run out of soda during the times we ate there. At the Angeles branch, they offered us iced tea and lemonade, but we wanted soda."

(We are forwarding copies of Carmela T's complaints to the concerned fastfood offices.)

SO WHAT COKE ARE YOU, REALLY?

Did you know that it's easy to tell someone's character by the things he or she likes? Take the quiz below and be surprised how much your taste tells a lot about who you are and, most of all, what Coke will best refresh you.

What would you wear on a big date?

- A. A classy, all-black ensemble from top to toe
- B. Whatever's loose and comfortable
- C. Preppy silhouettes that's dominantly neutral
- D. Body-hugging that will show your assets

Who are the artists on your CD rack?

- A. Maroon 5, Alicia Keys
- B. Hoobastank, Incubus
- C. Dashboard Confessional
- D. Ministry of Sound, Ibiza

What do you read?

- A. Newspaper and novels
- B. Independent titles
- C. Comics and sci-fi
- D. Magazines and self-help books

How do you like your steak?

- A. Well-done
- B. Rare
- C. Medium-rare
- D. I don't eat steak

What is your dream cell phone?

- A. The less complicated the better
- B. Something that no one else has
- C. With lots of games and software to operate
- D. Streamlined, with lots of stylish covers

What's your dream car?

- A. Anything that has four wheels and drive
- B. SUV
- C. Beetle
- D. Porsche

- A. Something that mommy would hang on the wall
- B. Wacky and crazy, with tongue sticking out
- C. You really don't care
- D. Glamorous, almost like a magazine photo shoot

Now, the fun part! Below is an assessment of your personality profile. Find out which one you are, based on your answers above. As a bonus, we've also written down which Coca-Cola best describes and suits you. After all, there's nothing like grabbing a Coke that'll refresh you the way you want it to.

Mostly A's

You're a classic. Everyone finds it easy to talk to you, and you get along well with almost everybody. You find it easy to get new friends, even in the most unlikely places.

So to speak, you're like the Regular Coke. The one that everyone has always loved.

Mostly B's

You're on the wild side. You like to explore new places, and you love the outdoors. You find satisfaction in experimenting, and it's happy knowing that there's always something different to do.

If you were a Coke, you'd be Cherry Coke. There's always a cherry wild side in you!

Mostly C's

You've got a lot going for you coz you've got it just right. You always see the fun side of things. Easy-going and humorous, surely no party will be the same without you.

You're definitely a Vanilla Coke—you have just the right touch of vanilla.

Mostly D's

You're ultra sophisticated. You always strive to improve yourself. You go to the gym, eat healthy food, because you know they're good for you. You're a New Age phenomenon!

Coke Light best suits you. It's the same Coke but with less than 1 calorie. It's good for you.

DOME'S Iced Cappuccino topped with Whipped Cream and Jelly

More than just a coffee place

DOME Café founders Phil May and Patna Jafferries were motivated by passion for producing the finest cup of coffee when they opened the first Dome Café in Perth, Australia in 1990.

With assistant general manager Andrew Hillyar at the helm, Dome Café franchises all over the world are trying to sustain that passion.

At Dome, every cup of coffee is made from 100 percent arabica beans, using the best equipment.

But Dome serves more than just coffee. It also has an extensive menu ranging from aperitif to main courses to desserts.

Hillyar is very hands-on in running the café. He says there are three things people look for in cafés and restaurants—value for money, quality ingredients and quality food, and great service.

FLOURLESS Chocolate Cake

BARBECUED pork chops

Aside from coffee, Dome also offers other beverages from Twining teas to San Miguel beer to Austra, an red and white wines.

Dome has branches at Greenbelt 3, 4th Floor (7283431), The Podium, ground floor (6875918), Shangri-La Plaza Mall, Level 1 (6359746), and Solid Mills Building, ground floor (8136672).

Strategically situated at the corner of Ayala Avenue and Sen. Gil Puyat Avenue (Buendia), The Columns, Ayala Avenue conveniently places its residents at a prestigious address that is within walking distance to Makati's most important business, commercial and entertainment hubs. The ground floor will have an enviable mix of cafés and restaurants with al fresco dining.

The Recreational Club, which stretches across the 7th floor podium of all three towers, provides the most complete mix-up of amenities among all other residential buildings in Makati.

Sterling record. Developed by Community Innovations, Inc., an Ayala company, residents of The Columns, Ayala Avenue can be assured of quality property management and Ayala's track record in delivering on its promises.

Location, location, location.

New packaging for food products

TETRA Pak has come up with the world's first retortable carton package as an alternative to tin cans.

Tetra Pak commercial director Jojo Guinjo says the square Tetra Recart package can keep beans, fruits, vegetables and soups, among others, for up to 24 months. Retortable means the package can be used for products that have to undergo a heating process as part of the food preservation procedure.

Available in 400 ml size, the new package has laser perforation, making it easier for consumers to open it without need of a can opener or scissors.

Since its introduction about two years ago, Tetra Recart packages are now used for pet food and vegetables in France. Hormel Foods Corporation in the United States has been converting its packaging from cans since July, specifically its Hormel Chili and Slogg Chili. Larry Vorpahl, Hormel Foods vice president and general manager of grocery products, says the Tetra Recart package offers such advantages as portability, easy opening and pouring, and convenient, space-saving stackability.

The packaging costs less than tin cans, and the products are preservative-free. Vorpahl adds that consumer research shows a clear preference for the new package.

MEALS are made memorable by different factors—the people you are with, the occasion, the ambience.

So far, I have had two really unforgettable, incredible meals. Incredible meal No. 1 was at Beijing's Green T. House in 2002. We feasted on Field of Dreams (Chinese pear slices topped with green tea mustard, walnuts and feta cheese), tuna and caviar on rose petals, eggplant with mixed vegetables, nuts and cheese, black tea roast duck, lamb with cheese and onion, six kinds of mushrooms, mixed seafood with green tea garlic sauce, pork and vegetable green tea dumplings, fresh apple juice, jasmine tea beer and green tea ice cream. Although that dinner now seems like a faraway dream, I will never forget the explosion of flavors.

Incredible meal No. 2 was the Italian dinner I enjoyed at Scusa in Jakarta.

Beautiful restaurant

Scusa (it means excuse or pretext in Italian) is InterContinental MidPlaza Jakarta's beautifully designed Italian restaurant. The interiors are a marriage of the modern and elegant, classy and casual.

We sat down for a late dinner with the hotel's director of sales and marketing Raymond Pereira and Scusa's Chef Luca Pezzera, who worked for Emirates Towers Hotels in Dubai before joining InterContinental MidPlaza Jakarta, created the mouth-watering and authentic Italian menu of Scusa.

Our unforgettable meal began with Oven-baked Australian Scallops served with sautéed spinach, olive oil and hollandaise sauce. The scallops were large, plump and juicy, made even tastier by the sauce.

Pinoys may have the habit of leaving the last piece untouched on the plate but I couldn't resist. I needed that second serving. That scallop was calling out to me.

When the scallops were gone, we attacked a platter of Scusa Antipasti that would make anyone drool. It was a delightful array of shrimp, shellfish, ham and vegetables—the perfect introduction to the many flavors of Scusa.

The Asparagus and Garlic Shitake Salad with Crispy Pancetta was a revelation. The texture of the crunchy bacon contrasted perfectly with that of the dressing-kissed mushrooms and vegetable leaves.

Sinful was the Foie Gras Ravioli with Creamy Parmesan Cheese Sauce. It was rich and flavorful. My mouth still waters when I think about it.

Cheaper but just as good

Chef Pezzera was exceptionally proud of his Wagyu beef. And he should be. Wagyu, which has become a gourmet hit, is a less expensive alternative to Kobe beef. The steak we enjoyed that night did not taste like a cheaper

Life begins at 40

ARIEL Manuel

I'M 40 years old and contemplating a career shift. Could I still be a chef? What makes a good cook/chef?

TOM

Well, Tom, I recall responding yes immediately to your first question. As for the second, I said I would have to get back to you.

The only answer I had then was passion. But it seemed too vague considering how sacred the subject was and how important the answer might be to you. After all, it could be a life-altering decision.

As I always do on KR, I try to give and share the best of me with you. When in doubt, I make sure that my facts and recommendations are thoroughly researched.

In this case, I asked my Kitchen Dream Team of Superheroes, the finest in the field, to come to the rescue. Here are their answers.

Chef Gerard Dubois, pastry chef/managing director, La Rose Noire, Hong Kong

Yes. One must have the passion—just passion and nothing else! At 20 you need a job, at 40 you need passion to be passionate about what you do. I have quite a number of colleagues who started quite late and who are now thriving and doing well.

Chef Norbert Gandler, director for Culinary, Pastry and Bakery Arts, International School for Culinary Arts and Hotel Management

Yes. To be a good [chef], one must cook from the heart. He must eat well and enjoy good food and must be open-minded and willing to try everything, whether he personally enjoys it or not. I still am not so fond of adobo but I appreciate it. A chef must keep his eyes open, not just when cooking but at all times. He must be aware and adventurous. While it is true that being a chef could be glamorous, it is [also] a lot of hard work.

Chef Ariel Manuel, executive chef/owner, Lolo Dad's

Yes, he must be passionate. He must cook from the heart.

Chef Humphrey Navarro, assistant director for Culinary Arts, International School for Culinary Arts and Hotel Management

Yes. There are five qualifications that make a good [chef]—heart, common

QUALITY OF LIFE:
Improved with Desogestrel-containing Low dosed Pill

Greatest Improvement seen in Sex Life

Besides being an effective method of birth spacing, contraceptive pills offer additional recognized benefits like reduction of menstrual abnormalities (dysmenorrhea, premenstrual syndrome, etc.), reduction in iron deficiency anemia, reduction in the risk of developing ovarian and endometrial cancer, and many other health benefits.

Although previously associated with non-positive effects such as irritability and mood changes, current data support a relationship between Pills and psychological well-being. Reduced fear of unwanted pregnancy and the resulting low incidence of psychological stress and improved sexual experience are probably key elements in the improvement in psychological well-being while using the Pills. Today, the most commonly used Pills contain lower doses of hormones and with such, the incidence of mood changing side-effects seemed to decrease.

A study in Germany in women who used the low dosed pill containing 20mcg of ethinylestradiol (EE) and 150mcg of desogestrel (DSG) evaluated the effect of the pill on the skin, body weight and quality of life. Quality of life was assessed by answering the Quality of Life and Enjoyment Questionnaire before and after 3 cycles of using the pill. Results showed that the 20mcg EE + 150mcg DSG pill had beneficial effects on the skin, there was no significant change in body weight, and there were significant improvements for all the quality of life items which include improvement in physical health and general well-being. The greatest improvement was seen on "sex life and mood" (K Diegarden, et al. 2000).

The 20mcg EE + 150mcg DSG pill was associated with improvements in quality of life and patient satisfaction, probably as a result of factors such as removing the worry of an unwanted pregnancy, shortened duration of menses, alleviation of menstrual complaints and low incidence of subjective side-effects.

Today, our cup overflows with blessings. After 18 months of hard work and unbound enthusiasm, we have achieved goals that may have been daunting for others – but not for the excellent management and staff of Mocha Blends.

We drew inspiration from all those who have supported us along the way. We acknowledge the guidance and partnership of Mocha Coffee of Australia, who set us up with their valuable training, first-rate products, and encouraging words. Paul Mannassis and his team did not just give us a cup of great coffee. They taught us how to make excellent coffee. In turn, we developed our own Pinoy blend, Maharlika, which is now being enjoyed at our coffee shops by Filipinos and foreigners alike. We are elated at the exuberance of our franchise owners. Their faith in our brand and products fuel our own drive at research and development, in order to furnish them with more items and services that will help spur the growth of their franchises.

We are heartened to see coffee lovers enjoying a good cup in the cozy and relaxed atmosphere of all our shops. Providing them a few minutes of respite from the stresses of daily life while sipping their favorite blend is reward enough.

And finally, but certainly not the least, we are grateful for these blessings that the Lord entrusted us. Many hands have worked to bring about the success. But it is only through His enabling that these same hands have been strengthened and inspired to give their very best.

Congratulations to everyone at Mocha Blends! We give God the glory!

Florante Dela Cruz
Founder & President
Mocha Blends Corporation

My congratulations to Mocha Blends Corporation on reaching 30 outlets after being in business for less than two years.

The company has already established its name in the growing coffee chain market in the Philippines with a mixture of Filipino and Australian flavour and style. Its partnership with Mocha Coffee Ltd., a Sydney-based coffee roasting company, continues to complement its operations in the country.

Australia is the Philippines' main source of roasted, unground decaffeinated coffee representing a 52.5% market share in 2003. Australia has long been renowned for its quality range of food products, technologies and services and in many ways is a perfect match for the vibrant Philippine food service sector.

With the increasing prominence of the coffee culture in the country, I wish Mocha Blends all the best as it continues to expand its operations in the market.

Mocha Blends

Now 30... and still growing

Now, there are 30 Mocha Blends outlets to satisfy the coffee craving of discriminating Filipinos. Some prefer a strong cup of joe, while others drown their daily stresses with latte. Yet whether hot or cold, bitter or sweet, plain or frothy, coffee lovers enjoy their libation best when served Mocha Blends espresso style.

And while taking sips of that flavorful brew, it would be interesting to stir up a cup of history and look back at the origins of coffee.

History of the Cup

Indeed, coffee had rather quaint beginnings. It was said to have been accidentally discovered by goats foraging in Ethiopia. A popular legend tells of a goat herder named Kaldi who observed that his goats were getting hyperactive. Upon investigation, he realized that they acted this way after eating berries from a bush. Kaldi tried the berries for himself and sure enough, his energies were renewed. Pretty soon, the berries became very popular in the region.

When monks heard about the berries, they dried the fruit for easy transport to distant monasteries. Once there, they reconstituted the berries in water and ate the fruit. They also drank the liquid produced, which proved very helpful in stimulating sleepy monks during their prayer time.

Given this valuable invigorating quality, the coffee berry's popularity started spreading to other lands. From Ethiopia, it found its way to the Arabian Peninsula, and was first cultivated in what today is the country of Yemen.

From Yemen, it traveled to Turkey, where for the first time, coffee beans were roasted over open fires. The roasted beans were crushed, and then boiled in water, a prelude to more modern coffee processes enjoyed today.

Venetian trade merchants were responsible for bringing coffee to the European continent. As its popularity increased, coffee houses started sprouting up all over Europe. These quickly became venues for intellectual and creative exchange.

Coffee came to the Americas in the 1700s, when a French infantry captain lovingly nurtured one small plant through the Atlantic crossing and transplanted it on the island of Martinique in the Caribbean. This one little plant became the grandfather of over 19 million coffee trees grown on the island within 50 years. It was not long before coffee crept into the rest of South and Central America.

When the colonized United States protested against the excessive taxes on tea imposed by the British, coffee became their national drink. Since then, Americans have embraced the bean with such fervor that today, the coffee industry has reached annual sales on the multi-billion dollar level.

The Brew from Down Under

Perhaps due to European influence, Australians began to grow coffee commercially in the late 19th century. The fledgling industry was starting to flourish when it was interrupted by local labor unrest. But with the advent of modern harvesting methods in the early 1980s, coffee production was re-established. With improved technology and machinery, Australian coffee became competitive with the beans from Brazil, Africa, Central America, and Indonesia.

Only the Arabica coffee variety is grown in Australia. As this particular bean thrives in tropical rainforest areas, coffee growing is concentrated on the country's tropical and sub-tropical eastern seaboard.

One of Australia's foremost coffee masters is Mocha Coffee Ltd. The company specializes in all aspects of café operations, such as supplying freshly roasted coffee beans to the wholesale trade throughout Australia and the Philippines, providing comprehensive barista training, distributing Elektra espresso coffee machines, supplying retail outlets with Mocha Coffee beans, chocolate coated coffee beans, loose-leaf teas, mocha chocolate powder, and all materials and support equipment.

With Paul Mannassis at its helm, this Sydney-based coffee roasting company with some 200 stores became the inspiration to create Mocha Blends in the Philippines. Mocha Coffee generously taught their own specialty coffee blends and provided Mocha Blends with the necessary training, from harvesting to retailing of coffee products.

Mocha Blends

ESPRESSO COFFEE • AUSTRALIA

The Filipino mocha

Mocha Blends officially started operations under Edsa Agro Industrial Corporation, a subsidiary of LAC Enterprises, Inc., The flagship company of Mr. Florante Dela Cruz. Himself its founder, president and driving force, Dela Cruz receives the full and able support of an indefatigable team vastly skilled and experienced in the restaurant business and other related industries.

Best seller, Mocha Frost

The concept of Mocha Blends is to serve excellent espresso coffee and espresso-based concoctions in a dining service environment. Its coffee, food and interiors are meant to offer the best of escapes, from the hurried world outside. A wonderful all-day destination where friends can meet and business associates can brainstorm. No queues, no rush. No second-rate brewed coffee here, just great java made the way it should be.

Hot and Steamy News About Franchising

Although they positioned themselves to cater to the upscale market, Mocha Blends was pleasantly surprised to see customers coming from all class brackets and age groups. And since it opened its first shop in Congressional Avenue in July 2002, Mocha Blends has been enjoying the loyal patronage of discriminating customers both in Metro Manila and the provincial areas.

Central to Mocha Blends' expansion is its franchising program. Whether through kiosk or store set-up, the franchisee enjoys a considerable amount of benefits accompanying this profitable business venture. Among them are the use of Mocha Blends' business name and trade mark, utilization of Mocha Blends business systems, high quality product lines, low franchise fee, low royalty fee, site selection assistance and evaluation, training, pre-opening assistance, grand opening assistance, post opening assistance, effective field service, marketing and promotional assistance, on-going operational support, procurement program, and operations manual.

The Flavor and Aroma of a Business Opportunity

The franchisees themselves are excited about their own shops' growth.

Cecil Ng operates the Mocha Blends franchise located at Pearl Garden Hotel in Adralico, which is the first Mocha Blends presence in the city of Manila. It was when the hotel was renovating that Cecil's family decided to put a coffee shop at the lobby. Having tasted Mocha Blends' selections, they became firm believers. And so these days, locals and foreign tourists alike enjoy their cup of coffee in this posh hotel setting.

Adralico

Coffee lover Noel Maniñas had always dreamt of opening his own coffee shop one day. An opportunity came when his gasoline station located at Marcos Highway in Antipolo afforded the space needed to house the coffee shop. As he also had a ready market of residents from the vicinity that usually filled up their cars with gas from his station, the question was just what coffee shop to put up. After visiting a Mocha Blends branch at Robinson's, Noel instantly liked their coffee flavors. And the rest is Mocha Blends history.

Ike Floro used to be a frequent customer of another coffee shop chain. He was becoming such a fixture that even the guards greeted him by name. Yet he was open to exploring other coffee tastes. And so when chance brought him to a Mocha Blends event, he was sufficiently impressed to acquire his own franchise.

Today, his Mocha Blends shop at Eastwood City enjoys the patronage of office workers and executives in the Libis area. And sometimes, a celebrity or two comes in to enjoy the cozy and quiet ambience with a cup of mocha.

To each his or her cup. Noel's mug is usually filled with Café Mocha. Ike has shifted to Flat White. And Cecil? She'll take a cool Mocha Frost any time.

But whatever the flavor, Mocha Blends' signature coffee taste is fast becoming a hit among Filipino coffee lovers. Fortunately, with the addition of about 10 more outlets by year end, Mocha Blends will be available in more cities around the country. For a nation that consumes at least 50,000 metric tons of coffee a year, that is good news indeed.

Mocha Blends Corp. Management: (l-r) Arnel Agbay, Business Development Manager; Florante Dela Cruz, President & CEO; Cecily Mameday, Marketing Manager; Luis de la Cruz, Managing Director; Arnel Uy, Director of Finance

30 coffee shops in a little over a year! That is a great accomplishment indeed! Truly a great example of Filipino diligence, resourcefulness, creativity, and management excellence.

We recall how some years back, we were very excited at the growth rate of coffee appreciation in the Philippines. As we have been supplying the roast for some time, we saw how coffee has become even more popular among many Filipinos today. So much so that we are seriously looking into setting up a roasting plant in your country.

And we are very proud to be your partner in the coffee industry. With each cup and each sip, we look forward to more creative collaboration knowing full well that our individual cultural tastes have set a conducive backdrop for a full-bodied blend of international coffee flavors.

Congratulations on your success! Here's to a richer cup ahead!

Espresso I believe is a perfect drink that leads to memorable occasions. It can trigger events and flashback of good times shared. I particularly relish the knowledge that we are integral in that experience.

We at Elektra are committed to planning, producing and updating prime, quality espresso machines. To consistently deliver precise workmanship that in turn results in pure coffee perfection. This quality we speak of deserves no less than the best which is Mocha Coffee.

We are indeed fortunate to have this opportunity that led us to Mocha Blends here in the Philippines. I am amazed at its growth for such a short time. What a young, dynamic and enthusiastic group you are! And I think it's because we all share in the passion of not just drinking the best coffee... but serving the best coffee.

I dare say, this is just the beginning. Congratulations to the Management, Partners and Franchisees of Mocha Blends.

Sip and... bite!

The Espresso Difference

Millions of people around the world enjoy a hot cup of coffee every morning, with some imbibing steaming quantities at all times of the day. Some prefer a strong black brew, while others drown their daily stresses with latte. Yet whether hot or cold, bitter or sweet, plain or frothy, real coffee lovers know that coffee is at its best when served espresso-style.

Espresso is a process of coffee extraction that uses only the best part of the beans. And instead of brewing the grounds or subjecting it to a long and tedious drip method, espresso utilizes water that is not quite boiling and a lot of pressure to deliver a hearty cup. But while there are excellent espresso machines available to calculate the water temperature and pressure, the pleasure of every sip also hinges on the expertise of a good barista.

Espresso, coffee made the way it should be Filipino coffee shop chain Mocha Blends serves only the best espresso masterpieces straight from the hands of their seasoned baristas. Allied with Australian master roasters Mocha Coffee Ltd., Mocha Blends' coffee comes from 100% imported beans, blended and roasted down under. This alliance also resulted in a specially developed blend that Because all their 30 branches and franchisees serve coffee the espresso way, the customer can capture the full delights of the beans when ordering a Long Black (espresso shot diffused in water), Cappuccino (espresso shot topped with a generous foam), Flat White (espresso shot marbled with milk), Café Latte (espresso shot topped with steamed milk), or Café Vienna (a Long Black crowned with whipped cream and garnished with coffee beans). There are also mocha mixes like Café Mocha (an espresso shot infused with the special Mocha Choc from Australia), Mocha Malt (an espresso shot with the special Mocha Choc plus delicious malted milk, and Mocha Adoration (Café Mocha with a twist of raspberry, crowned with whipped cream then laced with white chocolate). Those who like their coffee cold can enjoy Espresso on Ice. Traditional espresso offerings are Short Black (espresso in its purest form), Macchiato (espresso shot stained with milk), and Nogato (espresso shot sweetened with ice cream). Likewise, Mocha Blends celebrates the sweet tooth with signature frosts, most notable of which is Mocha Frost, a delightful blend of coffee essence and special Mocha Choc syrup built up on ice and creamy vanilla ice cream.

But Mocha Blends is not just a coffee paradise. They also serve hot and filling food, Since it opened its first shop in Congressional Avenue in July 2002, Mocha Blends has been enjoying the loyal patronage of discriminating customers both in Metro Manila and the provincial areas. Its regulars seem to have a favorite cozy corner that is as welcoming today as when they first visited. And as more and more franchises continue to dot the Philippine landscape, more Filipinos will get to enjoy the rich espresso goodness of Mocha Blends.

sense, feel, dedication and discipline.

Chef Tony Palermo, executive chef, Club Punta Fuego

Yes. Self-discipline, love and innovation make a good chef. The nice thing about having a job like ours is that there is no age limits. We never run out of jobs or offers simply because we're old. Take a two-year course and get all the experience you possibly could. See, in this business, you only get better with experience, and experience usually comes with age.

Chef Christopher Romine, executive chef, Shangri-La Makati

Yes. As long as you love it, as long as you have the passion. Learn the basics. You must be prepared for 18- to 20-hour days and to work when everyone else is on vacation. You have to adjust and organize your lifestyle.

There is a glamorous side to being a chef and it gives you a chance to see the world. But kitchen work isn't glamorous, especially when preparing 500 plates and everyone is telling you: "I need it now."

You must also be completely dependable. Being a chef means mastering everything in the kitchen—from costing, management, cooking. It's a difficult job, so you must love it!

Chef Cyrille Soenen, executive chef, Inter-Continental Manila

Oh, at 40? He must love it. For as long as he loves what he does, yes.

Tom, you couldn't have asked a more prestigious bunch to answer your question. Chef Christopher Romine put it together beautifully when he said: "Not all cooks are chefs but all chefs are cooks, who cook from the heart."

If this is at all a sign, then I guess we'll be seeing you at our end of the rainbow!

Cooking up a surprise

I've been married for four years and haven't cooked for my husband, not one decent meal. I'm hopeless in the kitchen. His birthday is coming up and I want to surprise him by cooking his favorite, Buffalo Wings.

CHE-CHE

I'm glad you decided to venture into the kitchen. Remember, to deep-fry your wings in very hot oil. Drain them on paper towels after frying and before tossing them into the Tabasco mixture. Serve hot with red lip-stick. Good luck and let me know how they turned out.

By the way, Buffalo Wings originated from a restaurant in Buffalo, New York called the Anchor Bar.

Buffalo Wings

4 lb chicken wings, cleaned
1/2 c butter, melted
1/2 c Tabasco or any hot pepper sauce (I like Chipotle Tabasco the best, gives it a nice flavor)

2 tbsp sugar
Combine Tabasco, butter and sugar. Set aside.

Heat up oil and deep-fry wings until golden. Toss in Tabasco mixture. Serve with sauce and celery sticks.

Sauce

Adjust ingredients according to taste.
1/2 blue cheese (I like substituting Gorgonzola for regular blue)

1/3 c cream cheese softened

1/3 c mayonnaise

1 tbsp lemon juice

2 tbsp finely chopped onion

2 tsp finely minced garlic

1/4 c finely chopped parsley

1/3 c sour cream

1 tbsp white wine vinegar

1/2 c sour cream

1 tsp sugar

Salt and pepper to taste

Combine in a bowl. Mix well and season to taste. Refrigerate until ready to serve.

Ingredients available at Rustan's, Unimart, S&R, Sam's, SM

BEFORE & AFTER, like their song says. Another Chad & Jeremy hit says, "Yesterday's Gone," but the present still sounds much like yesterday as far as their music is concerned.

40 years after, Chad & Jeremy still in perfect harmony

By Tina Arceo-Dumlao

BETTER 40 years late than never.

That's how long it took Chad Stuart and Jeremy Clyde, who made it big in the early 1960s as the British pop duo Chad and Jeremy, to come to the distant shores of the Philippines, where their music has many followers.

In an interview at the Century Park Hotel on Tuesday, Chad and Jeremy said they picked up their guitars again only last year, decades after they stopped performing, and found that new joy in singing their old songs.

Fortunately for them as well as for their fans, the voices of Chad, now 62, and Jeremy, 63, are still in good working condition, thanks to constant practice in their acting and musical careers. They sound just as good as they ever did, maybe even better.

"You never really stop being a musician," said Jeremy. "We are putting this year aside to have fun singing our songs again."

Chad promised that their music still sounds fresh 40 years after they first recorded them, precisely because they have been absent all these years.

"So my advice to other groups out there, take 40 years off," Chad said.

Jeremy said he thought of reviving the duo two years ago, when he read in Vanity Fair an article on the British music invasion. Chad and Jeremy were prominently mentioned in the article.

Jeremy asked his brother, who works with the Beatles estate, to check out the music scene and see if there was an opportunity for the duo to get back on the road.

"After making a few phone calls, he told me the scene was there if we wanted it," said Jeremy. "So I rang up Chad, and here we are."

It was easy for the two men to get back together since they have maintained their friendship even after they left from the recording scene and led separate lives on both sides of the Atlantic.

Jeremy was busy acting in the movies, on television and in theater in London, while Chad was a music teacher in Idaho in the United States.

Jeremy finally admitted that he was a schizophrenic, being an actor and a musician," said Chad. "And he also said he was bursting at the seams with new songs that he wanted to try out."

They knew that acoustic music has made a comeback in the United States, but they did not realize just how much of a rage it was until they performed last year in Cleveland, Ohio as part of The British Invasion concert broadcast by PBS.

"We were astonished at the reaction," said Jeremy. "We only sang a couple of songs but everybody was so excited, so we thought of doing this again."

Chad and Jeremy, known for their romantic sound and harmonious vocals, were friends and classmates at the prestigious Central School for Speech and Drama in London. They were first part of a short-lived band called The Jerks before they went on their own. They were discovered by composer and record producer John Barry and they scored their first hit, "Yesterday's Gone," in 1963.

They followed up their first hit with others like "Willow Weep for Me," "Before and After," "Distant Shores" and "Summer Song." The last song became their biggest hit in the US.

Conflicting commitments and problems with their record company led to their split in 1968. Apart from a short tour in 1986 as part of British Invasion II, with Gerry and the Pacemakers, Freddie and the Dreamers and The Searchers, they were largely absent from the touring scene.

But after seeing the response to their PBS stint, Chad and Jeremy decided to come back with a vengeance.

Chad and Jeremy are on a world tour, with the Philippines as their first stop. Brought to Manila by Steve O' Neal Productions, they will perform the Hard Rock Café in Glorietta tomorrow, Oct. 15, and at Aliw Theater on Saturday, Oct. 16.

Accompanying them are bassist Doug Garing and Chad's daughter Elizabeth, who will sing a couple of songs with her father.

Chad and Jeremy are also preparing for their first album in more than 20 years, an acoustic double album called "Now and Then," featuring their old hits and new compositions.

Surprise! They can act!

"I DIDN'T know they could act!" exclaimed filmmaker Gil Portes, as though the stars of "All About Men ... Penis Talks" were expected to be little more than gorgeous and sexy.

The internationally acclaimed Portes watched on opening night and thought Christian Vazquez, Luis Alandy, Carlo Maceda, Paolo Paraiso, Jeffrey Hidalgo, Douglas Robinson, William Thio and Russel Simon had all performed "like they were stage veterans."

In a word? Portes didn't think twice: "Bravo."

All roads led to Music Museum on Oct. 2 and 3, and the theater goes for their wish: A roller coaster ride of comedy, drama, music and superb entertainment.

Entertainment columnist Ronald Constantino said banker and art patron Danny Dolor had marveled at Alandy's acting in the sketches titled "Batang Pansit (Little Child)" and "Military Victim."

sweethearts of Alandy and Paraiso, respectively, looked proud and pleased. Del Valle was seen applauding enthusiastically, and Dizon, reportedly three months pregnant, walked up the stage during curtain call to give her man a hug and a flower.

Vazquez was overjoyed by the raves he had drawn: "I am thankful for the warm reception. It is a privilege to be part of Direk Joel Lamanagan's return to the theater after nine years. I learned a lot." He said his sketches, "Action Star" and "Perfect Penis," were "nakakaaliw [fun]!"

Although not one of the male leads, stage veteran Ricci Chan was a scene stealer as the "Unwanted Penis." The two girls in the cast, Jenine Desiderio and Angelu de Leon, definitely had their moments, too. Desiderio was at once comic and dramatic as "Operada (Transsexual)." The main guys were in the briefest of briefs—red and white bikinis—most of the time. For the rousing finale, "It's Raining Men" they wore multi-colored thongs. In fact, the cast also included male models who wore only thongs throughout the play: Jaydel Lee, Christian Sarmiento, Marlon Viado, Gerard Lee, Rico Bryan Ongcoy and Thomas Wallworth.

Lamanagan could only say, "Sulit lahat ng pagod namin (all our efforts have been rewarded)." Writer Ricky Lee was just as jubilant. The audience was no less impressive. Spotted were Lily Monteverde, Mel Chionglo, Boots Plata, Wenn Deramas, Jerry Sineng, Gilbert Perez, John Lazatin, Don Cuarema, Jerome Pobocan, (TV executive) Enrico Santos, German Moreno, Rajo Laurel, Randy Ortiz, Anton San Diego, Lara Fabregas, Phoenix Baranda, Wilma Doesnt, Lyn Sherman, (Broadway actor) Jose Llana, Jackie Aquino, Tots Tolentino, Elvie Pineda, Bob Zozobrado, Becky Garcia, Allan K, Arnel Ignacio and Ai Ai delas Alas.

Producers Manny Valera of DMV Entertainment Inc. and Arnold Vegafría of AIV Events International said "Penis Talks" hoped to "debunk myths about the Filipino male while at the same time advocating a more enlightened, head-on awareness of the endless possibilities of humanizing, politicizing and eventually liberating Filipino sexuality." That's a lot. Additional show dates are Oct. 15 and 16. Call Music Museum, 721-0635 or 721-6726; DMV Entertainment, 374-1361 or 415-0373; Ticketworld, 891-5610 or 891-9999. 'THE PUNISHER' Routine revenge

By Ruben M. Cruz Jr.
Contributor

"THE PUNISHER" is just the latest in a long line of revenge flicks featuring angry, almost crazy men, who let their fists and guns—in this case, even bow and arrow—do the talking.

Its plot involves the unpremeditated rendition of the most overworked of all modern action-movie premises: the good guy who goes on a rampage seeking revenge against the bad guys who killed his loved ones.

Yes, the loved ones of the movie's hero,

Frank Castle (Tom Jane), will die before the first reel is over. I am confident I didn't give anything away by revealing their death because the movie's trailer shows them dying. They have to die. That's why Castle becomes "The Punisher."

Fans of the Marvel Comics' crime fighter, upon whom this movie is based, know as much. By the way, this is already the second movie version of The Punisher. Dolph Lundgren, the Swede who played Russian Ivan Drago in "Rocky III," essayed the role in a 1989 movie of the same title, which was soon forgotten after it was released.

The key to the success of the revenge genre, at least for me, is to make the hero's settling of scores as viscerally and emotionally satisfying as possible. You do this by making the bad guys look really despicable, their actions so vile that the audience has no choice but to see the benefits of vigilante-style retribution. There should be no moral quagmire to sidestep, no dilemmas to complicate the hero's and the audience's consciences. The bad guys have to be that bad and we have to look forward to what's coming to them.

REVIEW

Fair warning

In "The Punisher" Castle is an undercover FBI agent whose last assignment, a drug bust, results in the accidental death of the son of criminal overlord Howard Saint (John Travolta). Pursuing the usual formulaic yada yada, Saint orders his hit men, led by chief torturer Quentin Glass (Will Patton, "The Mothman Prophecies"), to wipe out Castle and his entire clan from the face of the earth.

Conveniently enough, Castle and his entire clan, including his wife, son, father and two dozen or so relatives, are having a grand reunion in a resort house somewhere in Puerto Rico, where there are no neighbors, no people within miles to serve as witnesses, not even a barking dog for security. (If men should be so lucky.)

Quentin and his band of bad men accomplish the task, sparing no one and saving their cruellest for Castle and his wife and son. They leave, thinking of course that everyone is dead; and of course, they're wrong.

The rest is routine revenge. It doesn't take much more to send Castle off the deep end, and the title of the movie gives fair warning for the carnage that follows.

This is the kind of movie fueled purely by blood, sweat and testosterone, the kind guys look for as an antidote when they've gone to one too many chick flicks with their dates. It's serviceable enough, with loud noises, action and one-liners—the cheesiest ones you've ever heard—to keep most of them awake and interested.

But when it comes to the hero's payback, the movie doesn't deliver the goods. First-time director Jonathan Hensleigh, who wrote the screenplay of "Armageddon" and "Die Hard 3" and shares writing credits here as well, tries to make his work kinetic enough to give certain scenes a texture the script definitely lacks, but his efforts are futile.

Empathy a must

The screenplay glosses over too many story elements that need exploration. Never mind the large chunks of nonsense in the movie's storyline—movies of this genre are normally stupid, boneheaded and absurdly impossible anyway. But there has to be something more than the growling macho dialogue, the gunplay and all those explosions to make you care about what happens to Frank Castle and to make you salivate at the prospects of his vengeance.

FAMILY MAN. FBI agent Frank Castle, played by Tom Jane, loses his whole family in a massacre ordered by a drug lord

If you want to embrace this genre, creating empathy for the hero is a must, and action, no matter how effectively paced it is or nicely choreographed, doesn't create empathy.

Thomas Jane may have as much presence as any actor working today, but he simply cannot convey deep emotion here because he's got nothing to work with. His display of pain and loss after his family's death is limited to icy glares, drooping shoulders and large gulps of bourbon. That's about it.

"The Punisher" wants us to feel Frank Castle's pain, but the filmmakers never make it real.

If it's any consolation, though, Jane does have the hulking physique and threatening demeanor required for the role. He even resembles the artist's illustrations of The Punisher in the comic book.

Travolta deserves better

Apart from Will Patton, no one makes much of an impression. Not that Patton is good; how could he be, with this material? But at least he deserves kudos for having the good sense to realize he's playing one of the movie's many one-dimensional characters, so he might as well have fun with it.

Travolta? If this is what he wants to do with his career, fine. He very well knows he deserves better stuff than this. Oh well, maybe we'll catch him in his element in the upcoming "Ladder 49" where he co-stars with Joaquin Phoenix.

There's another mortal sin the filmmakers commit for which I cannot give absolution. They cast Rebecca Romijn, the bombshell who kicked ass in movies like "X-Men" (she played Mystique), "Femme Fatale" and "Rollerball" and give her nothing to do but watch Jane admiringly. She's little more than set decoration in this movie.

It makes you wish she'd don her blue body paint and start inflicting some real punishment.

For the genre to succeed, the bad guys have to be very bad and we have to look forward to what's coming to them.

'GH 5' celebrates with Norma J tonight

RICO J. Puno's Coriks bar in Makati presents specials this month, starting with the GH 5 celebrating with Norma J. tonight, Oct. 14. The GH 5 (Great Hitmakers 5) are Hajji Alejandro, Rico J. Puno, Marco Sison, Rey Valera and Nonoy Zubiaga. And Norma J. is Norma Japitana, their international agent and touring manager.

The five will rehash the fun and naughtiness that happened while they were on tour with Norma J. and how they could put one over her even if she watched them like a hawk.

Listen to their music and find out their secrets tonight.

The GH 5 will be in Hong Kong

Nov. 7 with Cesar Montano and Rufa Mae Quinto as guests, and in Guam on Dec. 4. Noth shows were arranged through NJ Associates.

Coriks' other specials are Florante tomorrow night, the 2nd anniversary show with Rico J. on Saturday, Oct. 16, and Lloyd Umali on Oct. 22 and 23.
